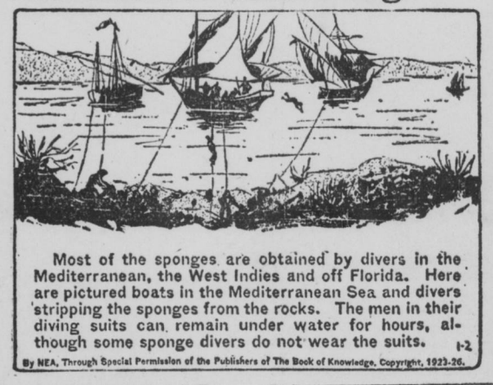
The Book of Knowledge

SKETCHES BY BESSE
SYNOPSIS BY BRAUCHE

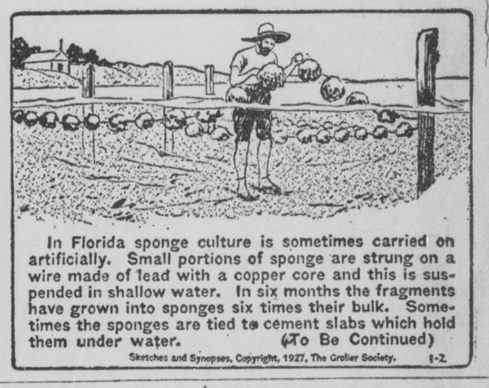


Most of the sponges are obtained by divers in the Mediterranean, the West Indies and off Florida. Here are pictured boats in the Mediterranean Sea and divers stripping the sponges from the rocks. The men in their diving suits can remain under water for hours, although some sponge divers do not wear the suits. 1-2

By NEA, Through Special Permission of the Publishers of The Book of Knowledge, Copyright, 1923-26.

Some types of sponges are shown here. All these once lived in the sea, breathing oxygen after the manner of a fish. 1-2

Here are more sponges. When the sponge feeds, it draws in water through its many pores and the food the water contains is devoured.



In Florida sponge culture is sometimes carried on artificially. Small portions of sponge are strung on a wire made of lead with a copper core and this is suspended in shallow water. In six months the fragments have grown into sponges six times their bulk. Sometimes the sponges are tied to cement slabs which hold them under water. (To Be Continued) 1-2
