DAILY SENTINEL.

TUESDAY.....SEPTEMBER 20

A Child's Dream of a Star.

There was once a child, and he strolled about a good deal and thought of a number of things. He had a sister who was a child too, and his constant companion. These two used to wonder all day long. They wondered at the beauty of the flowers, they wondered at the hight and blueness of the sky, they wondered at the depth of the bright water, they wondered at the goodness and power of God who made the lovely world.

They used to say to one another, sometimes, "Supposing all the children on the earth were to die, would the flowers, and the water, and the sky be sorry?" "For," they said, the buds are the children of the flowers, and the little playful streams that gambol down the hill-sides, are the children of the water, and the small bright specks playing at hide and seek in the sky all night, must surely be the children of men, no more."

There was one clear, shining star that used to come out in the sky before the rest, near the church spire, above the graves. It was larger and more beautiful, they thought, than all the others, and every night they watched for it, standing hand in hand at the window. Whoever saw it first cried, "I see the star!" And often they cried out both together, knowing so well when it would rise, and where. So they grew to be such friends with it that before laying down in their beds, they always looked out once again to bid it good night; and when they were turning round to sleep they used to say, "God bless the star!"

But while she was still very young—oh, very, very—the sister drooped, and came to be so weak that she could no longer stand in the window at night, and then the child looked sadly out by himself, and when he saw the star, turned and said to the patient pale face on the bed, "I see the star!" and then a smile would come upon the face, and a little weak voice used to say, "God bless the star!"

And so the time came, all too soon! when the child looked out alone, and when there was no face on the bed; and when there was a little grave among the graves not there before; and when the stars made long rays down toward him, as he saw it through his tears.

Now, those rays were so bright, and they seemed to take such a shining way from earth to heaven, that when the child went to his solitary bed, he dreamed about the star, and dreamed that, lying where he was he saw a train of people taken up that sparkling road of angels. And the star, opening, showed him a great world of light, where many more such angels waited to receive them.

All these angels, who were waiting, turned their beaming eyes upon the people who were carried up into the star; and some came out from the long rows in which they stood, and fell upon the people's necks and kissed them tenderly, and went always with them down avenues of light, and were so happy in their company that, lying in bed, he wept for joy.

But there were many angels who did not go with them, and among them one he knew. The patient face that once had laid upon his bed was glorified and radiant, but his heart found out his sister's among the host.

His sister's angel lingered near the entrance of the star, and said to the leader among those who had brought the people thither—

"Is my brother come?"

And he said "No."

She was turning hopefully away, when the child stretched out its arms and cried—"Oh, sister, I am here! Take me!" and she then turned her beaming eyes upon him, and it was night, and the star was shining into the room, making long rays down toward him as he saw it through his tears.

From that hour forth the child looked out upon the star as on the home he was to go to, when his time should come, and he did not belong to the earth alone, but to the star too, because of his sister's angel gone before.

There was a baby born to be a brother to the child; and while he was so little that he had never yet spoken a word, he stretched his tiny form out on his bed and died.

Again the child dreamed of the opened star, and of the company of angels, and of the train of people, and the rows of angels with their beaming eyes all turned upon those people's faces.

Said his sister's angel to the leader—"Is my brother come?"

And he said—"Not that one, but another."

As the child held his brother's angel in her arms he cried—"Oh, sister, I am here! Take me!" And she turned and smiled upon him, and the star was shining.

He grew to be a young man, and was busy at his books, when an old servant came to him and said—"Thy mother is no more, I bring her blessing on her darling son!"

Again at night he saw the star, and all that former company. Said his sister's angel to the leader—"Is my brother come?"

And he said—"Thy mother!"

A mighty cry of joy went forth through all the star, because the mother was reunited to her children. And he stretched out his arms and cried, "Oh, mother, sister and brother, I am here! Take me?" And they answered him, "Not yet," and the star was still shining.

He grew to be a man whose hair was turning gray, and he was sitting in his chair by the fireside, heavy with grief, with his face bedewed with tears, when the star opened once again.

Said his sister's angel to the leader, "Is my brother come?"

And he said, "Nay, but his maiden daughter."

And the man who had been the child saw his daughter, newly lost to him, a celestial creature among those there, and he said, "My daughter's head is on my sister's bosom, and her arm is round my mother's neck, and at her feet there is the baby of old time, and I can bear the parting from her. God be praised!"

And the star was shining.

Thus the child came to be an old man, and his once smooth face was wrinkled, and his steps were slow and feeble, and his back was bent. And one night as he lay upon his bed, his children standing round, he cried, as he had cried so long ago, "I see the star!"

They whispered one another, "he is dying."

And he said, "I am. My age is falling from me like a garment, and I move toward the star as a child. And oh, my father, now I thank thee that it has so often opened to receive those dear ones who now await me!"

And the star was shining; and it shines upon his grave.

The Fortieth Course will open on the 18th of October, and terminate on the last of February. Students are earnestly advised to be early in attendance, especially those who expect to be candidates for graduation; as credit for a full course can not be allowed unless the pupil matriculates at an early period, and observes regular attendance on the lectures. Clinical lectures will be delivered at the Commercial Hospital and City Dispensary during September and October, previous to the commencement of the regular course.

The public Commencement will take place early in March, with as little delay after the close of lectures as practicable.

At the close of each session, two or three graduates will be elected to act as Resident Physicians and Surgeons in the Commercial Hospital for the ensuing year.

Two Resident Physicians will be appointed to St. John's Hotel for Invalids, and the graduates of this College can compete for the places.

Two advanced students will be elected at the close of each session to act as Resident Pupils at the Dispensary for one year, who will have rooms supplied them in the College building
