

Cards' Andujar blanks Giants on four-hitter

By The Associated Press

Joaquin Andujar said he didn't pitch any differently than in his 6-16 season last year. But he'd better not tell that to his manager, Whitey Herzog.

The St. Louis right-hander, one of the heroes of the Cardinals' World Series victory in 1982, shut out San Francisco Giants 3-0 on four hits Friday night as the Cards won their second game in three starts.

"Maybe people will believe now what I've been saying," Andujar said. "The Giants hit some balls hard, but they were caught. Last year, when ball were hit hard, they were doubles, triples and homers."

But Herzog was more cautious, pointing out that Andujar won his first two decisions last season: "Joaquin got off to a good start, then had a little tough luck and then started pitching bad."

In other National League games, New York topped Houston 8-1, Pittsburgh beat Los Angeles 3-1; Montreal beat Atlanta 8-5; San Diego topped Chicago 3-2 and Philadelphia beat Cincinnati 8-4.

In San Francisco, the Cards got the only run Andujar needed in the first. Lonnie Smith led off with a single off Bill Laskey, stole second and scored on Ken Oberkfell's single. Andy Van Slyke lined a home run, his first, over the right field fence in the fourth.

Meanwhile, Andujar was in complete control, allowing only one runner past first — Johnnie Lemaster, who singled to lead off the first and stole second.

"I just kept my head up and worked hard," Andujar said.

Pirates 3, Dodgers 1
John Tudor, making his first NL start, pitched hitless ball for 6-2/3 innings, but needed last-out help from Cecilio Guante to clinch Pittsburgh's first win of the season.

Steve Yeager got the first hit off the former Boston left-hander. But Tudor, who surrendered four hits in all, had to leave in the ninth after Pedro

Guerrero walked and Yeager singled.

Pinch hitter Rick Monday singled home Guerrero, but Guante retired Greg Brock on a fly to center.

Johnny Ray and Jason Thompson led a 10-hit attack for Pittsburgh. Ray had a double and two singles, Thompson a double, single and an RBI.

Phillies 8, Reds 4

The defending NL champions did it with 15 hits, all singles, and some help from late-inning defensive replacement Greg Gross and pinch hitter Len Matuszek, who played a key role in a four-run eighth that put the game away. The Phillies were helped in that inning by two Reds errors on the same play.

"We showed how versatile we are," said third baseman Mike Schmidt. "We used everybody."

Charles Hudson struggled through five innings for the win, allowing seven hits and surrendering four walks. Kevin Gross pitched two scoreless innings and Al Holland pitched the final two, giving up a two-run eighth-inning homer to Nick Esasky.

Joe Price was the loser.

Padres 3, Cubs 2

Pinch hitter Champ Summers doubled into the left-field corner to score Garry Templeton from first base with one out in the ninth to give the Padres their third win without a loss.

The Cubs had tied it in the ninth when reliever Sid Monge, who eventually became the winning pitcher, walked pinch hitter Richie Hebner with the bases loaded.

The winning run came off reliever Lee Smith, who gave up a single to Templeton before Summers lined a 1-1 pitch just inside the leftfield foul line. Templeton slid in ahead of the relay throw.

"For me, it's like with the Goose (Gossage)," Summers said. "He sees 40,000 fans out there and it adds five miles to his fastball. The same thing happens when I hit."

sports

Suit over Colts blocks release of NFL schedule

BALTIMORE (AP) — A Baltimore City Circuit judge has issued a 35-day restraining order keeping the National Football League from handing out a 1984 season schedule, which league officials said was to have been released by the end of next week.

Circuit Judge Martine B. Greenfeld signed the injunction, which prevents the NFL from transferring the Colts "certificate of membership" from the city, late Friday afternoon.

Last week, Colts owner Robert Irsay moved the team from its Baltimore home to Indianapolis, sparking a string of litigation over rights to the team that some say could last for years.

The injunction also prohibits NFL officials from approving any contracts or broadcast sponsors and accepting television income "unless and until" the "home territory" is the city of Baltimore.

Officials told Schneider that with each passing day, the team gains more room to negotiate ticket sales and other efforts to promote the football season in Indianapolis. Jurisdiction on all suits involving the team and the city would come under the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction if it decides to rule on the case.

The legal maneuvering late Friday afternoon followed a move by Colts lawyers in U.S. District Court in Indianapolis that resulted in a temporary restraining order blocking the city's lawsuit. The suit was filed on behalf of the "Indianapolis Colts" against Baltimore's mayor and city council.

The league did not present legal arguments on the city's request for an injunction since it would "have an opportunity for a hearing as soon as we review the court papers," Browne said. He added that officials would again pursue court papers before deciding whether the Colts games would be listed in Baltimore or Indianapolis.

Last week City Circuit Judge Robert L. Karwacki, signed a 10-day order preventing anyone with formal ties to the Colts from doing anything to move the club out of town. That suit was part of a formal condemnation proceeding by the city to acquire the football team under legal principles generally used to obtain land for public use.

However, the previous suit did not specifically mention the NFL, which is apparently why the city sought another injunction Friday.

Meanwhile lawyers for the football franchise have requested the suit be moved to U.S. District Court since, it involves parties from more than one state.

Baltimore officials also appeared in federal bankruptcy court to testify before Judge James F. Schneider that the city will be irreparably harmed if it cannot pursue its eminent domain proceeding against the football team.

Officials told Schneider that with each passing day, the team gains more room to negotiate ticket sales and other efforts to promote the football season in Indianapolis. Jurisdiction on all suits involving the team and the city would come under the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction if it decides to rule on the case.

The legal maneuvering late Friday afternoon followed a move by Colts lawyers in U.S. District Court in Indianapolis that resulted in a temporary restraining order blocking the city's lawsuit. The suit was filed on behalf of the "Indianapolis Colts" against Baltimore's mayor and city council.

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's injunction."

But Max O. Truitt, a lawyer representing the Baltimore Football Club, Inc. — the team's formal name — told Schneider the city's maneuver was "an effort to gain an unfair advantage over a business that does not want to be in Baltimore anymore by preventing it from conducting its business."

The order by U.S. District Judge William E. Steckler prevents the city from pursuing its eminent domain suit in city or federal court or trying to get Karwacki here to extend his injunction.

In Indianapolis William M. Evans, a lawyer for the Colts, called the city's seeking of the injunction against the NFL "incredible." Evans said Friday, "it shocks me they would take action that appears to be in violation of Steckler's