Earth not our Abiding Place

Bulwer eloquently says:—"I can not believe that earth is man's abiding place. It can't be that our life is cast up by the oceans of eternity to float a moment upon its waves and then sink to nothingness! Else why is it that the glorious aspirations, which leap like angels from the temple of our heart, are forever wandering about unsatisfied? Why is it that the rainbow and clouds come ever with a beauty that is not of earth, and then pass off and leave us to muse upon their favored loveliness? Why is it that the stars, who hold their festival around the midnight throne, are set above the grasp of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And finally, why is it that bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view, and then taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of of our affection to flow back in Alpine torrents upon our heart? We are born for a higher destiny than that of earth; there is a realm where the rainbow never fades—where the stars will be spread before us like islands that slumber on the ocean—and where the beings that pass before us like shadows will stay in our presence forever."

FANCY DREAMS.—Some young ladies regard marriage as a fairy land, where violets and roses perpetually blossom, where the cedar tree and the cinnamon tree ever flourish—where the waters of tranquility and sweetness uninterruptedly flow. Tell them there are thistles and briars in that state, though they do not contradict, yet they do not credit you, for they believe that their love their devotedness for each other, will exempt them from the cares, the vicissitudes, the anxieties which generally pertain to humanity. All lovers, before marriage, conceive that their destiny will be an exception to the general rule. The future with them will be ton jours volcur'e rose. Could you give them a sketch in the pages of their future history, they would not believe a word; they would set you down as a misanthrope, a painter of gloomy and unnatural scenes an ominal represser of the hopes and aspirations of youth. The dark spots which the telescope of your experience might discover they would regard but as mole hills in the moon. If they would but reflect a little, how much misery they would avoid.

Ancient philosophers used to say, that the best indications of a man's inward feelings was to be found in the choice of his readings and in the communion of the soul with the writers of the age. I do not believe that this reflection has lost anything of its accuracy for being old. Mr Lincoln, who tries to regulate his life upon the model of the great statesmen of Rome and Greece, and, who to that effect has lived in close intimacy with Montaigne for the last three months, adds by his example a new weight to the authority of the old sages. He reads the old French writer with delight; and says he is the greatest thinker France, and perhaps the world, has produced. His readings are not, unfortunately for us, confined to that book. Others of a more humanous character occupy, also, his leisure. He has recently added to his private library the "History of Cromwell's Protectorate," the "Memoirs of Napoleon the First from Egypt," the "Coup d' Etat of Napoleon Third." These three books, which might be called "Treaties on the Art of Usurpation," are now his subject for meditation. He reads them by day and by night and puts them under his pillow case when he goes to bed, so as to have the determinous examples and practices contained in these books in close proximity with the seat of his thoughts.—Washington Letter

LONG TRAILED DRESSES.—It is said that the nobility of England once passed a law prohibiting the wearing of boots with soles more than two feet long. The toes were fastened up to the knees with strings, giving them the appearance of sleigh runners. That was a very convenient fashion compared with the long trailed dresses worne by the ladies of the present day—especially when going down stairs in a crowd. A young gentleman of our acquaintance, in coming down from the opera house, a few evenings since accidentally stepped on a woman's superfluous half yard of dry goods, and he says such swest looks as she gave him made his head swim. When last heard from, he was slowly recovering, though still haunted by strange phantoms dressed in crinoline.

EQUESTRAIN AND STRONG MINDED WEDDING.—A wedding took place at Sherwood, Illinois, recently, the parties Mr. Josiah W. Crandall and Miss Hulda B. Hurst. The ceremony was performed in front of the officiating clergyman's residence, the bridal party being on horseback and the bride and her three bridesmaids (Miss Amanda C. Hurst, Julia Stellenburg, and Miss Mary M. Thurberg) dressed and mounted en cavalier. The bride's costume consisting of a deep blue cloth dress coat, deep blue cassimere pants, buff cassimere vest, black dress hat, choker collar, black neck tie, ruffled shirt bosom, and buff kid gloves; plain flat gilt buttons of the richest quality on the coat and vest. The brides maids were dressed precisely like the bride, excepting only that they wore plain shirt bosoms and lavender colored gloves. The novelty of the ceremony attracted a large company of the neighbors. After the ceremony was over the bridal party rode to the residence of Mr. Crandall's mother, where the formal wedding feast took place. The bride and the bridesmaids wore thier riding suits during the whole day.

Prentice says an industrious searcher after the marvelous is busy making a collection of the various forms of oaths administered to American citizens under the present admistration. We understand that he has already collected nine hundred forty-seven varieties. We don't know whether the collections include Andy Johnson's variety.

The New York Atlas says that Dan Rice is down on Lincoln for stealin all his jokes, and palming them off as original.

ROOMS

PLYMOUTH, MARSHALL COUNTY, INDIANA

The proprietor of this establishment having purchased the late interest of A. J. Hassler in the same, and having made extensive additions thereto is now prepared to do all kinds of Photographing, Ambrotyping, Ferrotyping and Melainotyping in the highest style of the art. His large sky and side lights enable him to take all kinds of pictures in all kinds of weather.

He is now having an immense run of those beautiful Carte de Visites, that are all the rage in the cities. They are just the thing and everybody should have a dozen at once.

Life-sized Photographs as true to nature as nature is true to herself, and very popular Pictures of all kinds copied and enlarged.

Don't fail to procure a life likeness of your Father, Mother, Son, Daughter, Husband or Wife before their dear faces are hidden from your view by the grave. Money could not buy from you the poorest and fairtest Photographic image of the lost loved one. Then delay not a day lest the substance fade ere you secure the shadow.

The undersigned having had years of experience in the picture business, and having recently become familiar with all the late improvements in the art, flatters himself that his work will compare favorably with the best done in the cities.

New and beautiful pictures, Stereoscopic views etc., will constantly be added to the already respectable stock; so that this establishment will indeed be a "Fine Art Gallery." Call and see the
