The Marriage of the Graces.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

"Where?" repeated the man, raising his cap from one ear, and putting his hand behind it.

Mr. Dapperman repeated his direction in a louder tone. The driver nodded, mounted his seat and drove his impatient passenger somewhat slowly for some time. At length the rusty carriage stopped.

"This is the Portland House, yer honer," said the driver, dismounting, and pointing to a little red brick tavern, near the water.—His eyes, however, were fixed on the smoke of the distant steamer, as she was leaving a wharf on the other side of the river, after landing there the three individuals who had been his former passengers.

"That!" said the bridegroom, in a rage; "why, you blockhead, I said 'Courtland House.' I have half a mind to break your head for your stupidity."

"Better not sir," was the reply, "a man can't help being deaf, can he?—ye 'ort to speak louder."

Mounting his box once more, he smiled in a gleeful manner, thereby exhibiting a double row of very white teeth; and dashing away arrived at the place designated in a very few minutes.

A coarse-looking man stood at the door, and rather officiously carried in all the traveler's heavy baggage. When this was done, and the door closed, the former driver betook himself to the inside of the vehicle, where he hastily divested himself of his head-gear, while his new-found assistant, mounting the box, drove the Hon. Tom Masterly quickly home to dress for the bridal.

"All is ready, my dear aunt," said Mr. Masterly, half an hour afterwards, as he knocked softly at Mrs. Wycherly's dressing-room. "Mr. Dapperman is here, and the minister waits."

The lady, appeared radiant in white velvet and jewels. "I will go for Grace," she said; "she is quite ready I am sure, but I must speak to and present her myself. In a few minutes come up with Mr. Dapperman to meet us."

Mr. Masterly placed in her hand a splendid jewel-case, and descended the stairs, humming softly a few barr of "Jack 'o Hazledon."

Mrs. Wycherly, queenly as Cleopatra, knocked emphatically at her daughter's door. There was no reply. She tried the lock; it was fast within. She knocked more loudly; "Come Jane, I hope you are both ready; every one waits." Still there is no reply.—"Miss Howard, Grace," she called imperious "open the door at once; I will submit to no childish folly or delay." No answer came, no sound. In vague alarm Mrs. Wycherly passed from the door to a back piazza, on which a communication room opened. This she passed hastily through it to Grace's dressing-room. Both were empty. The bridal dress, the bridal veil, the bridal wreath were all there; but the sad, pale bride was gone.

The mother called in a despairing voice on her daughter's name: and clenched her hands, and held her breath to listen for a reply. None came; but her restless eye fell on a folded note upon her toilet. It was very brief:—

"Forgive me mother, if I leave you to unite my fate to one whose love has been made clear to me. I do so, not alone because I love him only, but because I dare not stand before the altar with falsehood on my lips.—Once more forgive me; if not now, at some future time forgive and bless me as I do you. GRACE."

Mrs. Wycherly stood a moment motionless with rage and disappointment. Her white and quivering lips uttered but one word: Fool, she muttered with bitter scorn and with a contemptuous and disdainful motion of the note, as if she thus cast off the writer forever; and then she once more sunk in silent despair.

She roused herself, at length—something must be done, she rung the bell that was to summon Mr. Masterly, supposing her emotion the while with unspeakable effort.

Her nephew obeyed the summons and entered, accompanied by the bridegroom. She was not quite prepared to see him, but her rage could no longer be controlled.

"Perfidious wretch," she cried, striking the note violently as she spoke, "this is your work; you counselled and aided this weak fool to disobey me; throw herself away on a beggar, and bring shame and derision on us all."

Mr. Masterly looked all innocent astonishment. "What is the matter, my dear aunt?" he exclaimed. "What is the matter, madam?" echoed the agitated bridegroom.

She threw the note contemptuously to them and turned away. They read it together. Mr. Dapperman, all trembling with disappointment, anger and shame, attempted rather fiercely to question Mr. Masterly, but catching that gentleman's eye, he suddenly desisted; and turning with a burning brow to the lady, addressed her in a somewhat high tone: "Am I to understand, madame, that your daughter—"

She interrupted him. "I have no daughter; she has cast off my authority, and wronged and insulted both you and myself."

"But what can be done?" said the bewildered man; "what can be said to the company assembled below?" and the big drops stood on his forehead as he thought of the ridiculous position he occupied.

"All this is equally strange and unfortunate, but it is no fault of mine;" said Hon. Tom evasively, and casting a deprecating look at his aunt; "let us then consider it dispassionately, and see what can best be done in the premises."

Mrs. Wycherly only replied by a look of scornful anger.

Mr. Masterly went on. "All that seems to remain to us, is to repair to the drawing room and say to our expectant friends, 'that Grace has changed her mind,'" both of his auditors writhed—"or else"—he suddenly added, "go calmly down and be married yourselves, and leave it to be inferred that you are really the parties to this contract. Many persons have suspected this to be the case; my aunt's name is Grace also, the license and settlement are in form, and none need ever know of our present vexatious position, which else cannot fail to cover us all with inextinguishable ridicule."

This was sufficiently cool. But startling as the proposal seemed, it opened to the deserted couple a means of escape from what both, at that moment, dreaded more than aught else—the derision and contempt of their own dear world.

* * * * * * *

There is something very queer about this marriage," said a wedding guest, as he leaned, with folded arms, against a post in of the entrance door. "I'll bet a basket of champagne Grace Wycherly is not married to-night."

"Done; I take your bet," said Mr. Masterly, tapping his shoulder, as he re-entered from his late exciting conference, "for I precede the bride."

The beautiful widow and the bachelor millionaire stood before the minister and plighted their vows.

A wreath of orange flowers rested on the marble brow of the bride, and jewels of price, bought by the wealthy lover to decorate one younger, yet scarcely fairer, brilliantly circled her arms and throat. And admirable, indeed, was the perfect self-possession with which she received the congratulations of her friends as Mrs. David Dapperman. Nor did she relax her smile when (in answer to a very natural question) she replied, "Oh! Grace, poor child, preferred not being present, and, indeed, quite ran away from the ceremony!"

Incomparable Mrs. Dapperman—she was equal to any emergency.

A carriage, prepared by the Hon. Tom, at early morning bore away the "happy pair" on their bridal visit to that magnificent mansion on the Hudson, and thence they proceeded on their continental tour; the perplexed and hurried bridegroom hardly yet determined in his mind whether he had been saved from exposure, or thoroughly done by his clever and beautiful bride.

A couple of paragraphs, also the product of the indefatigable Mr. Masterly, announced, in the morning papers, the marriage of "David Dapperman, Esq., to Mrs. Grace Wycherly, &c, and also, on the same evening, Lieut. H. Herbert, U. S. N., to Miss Grace Wycherly, &c., &c."

In the course of the day a friend called upon the Hon. Tom Masterly. "Glad to see you Charley, my boy," he said, exultingly; "send in the champagne this evening if you please, and we will pledge a in a bumper full and drowing the health and happiness of the new-made brides."

"With all my heart, Tom, but I am all impatience to learn the solution of this inexplicable riddle."

"All in good time, my friend; let the wine, however, be fit for the gods. Henceforth I am immortal; high priest of Hymen as I am; having been, as you shall learn, sole director and assistant at the marriage of the 'Graces.'"

A SLIGHT MISTAKE—A Scene in the Cabin of an Alabama Boat.—Enter Reverend Gentleman, and pointing out a trunk to the porter:

"Here, porter, take this trunk ashore."

Frenchman rising from a chair close by:

"Dat ish my thrunk, what for you want to carry my trunk for? Dish ish not my place.'

Rev. Gentleman: "You are laboring under some mistake, sir, that is my trunk."

Frenchy: "You thrunk, hay? No siree; dat ish my thrunk!"

Rev. Gent: "I repeat, you must be laboring under—"

Frenchy: "By dam! you tink dat ish you thrunk, hay? May be you got one key to dat thrunk? I got one key! Maybe my key unlock dat thrunk, too." (Takes out and applies his key to the lock.) "Ah, ha!" (lifting the lid,) "my key fit you thrunk. You say dat ish you thrunk? Maybe dish ish you fighting iron too?" (holding up and exhibiting a revolver) "You thrunk, hay? you pistole? By dam! my thrunk too! Dish ish my revolver. By gar, lookee here, dis you Hym Buk?" (shuffling dexterously a pack of cards.) "You one black leg, hay! I gambles. I beat you one, two, tree rubbers."

The Rev. Gent. could stand no more, but bolts through the communion-way amid the roars of the passengers. We save his credit, however, by saying that in his retreat he pointed out on the boiler deck a trunk very similar to the Frenchman's having the same initials on the end, which the Porter seized and followed him ashore with.

Yankee Blade.

OX LYING.—Lying supplies those who are addicted to it with plausible apology for every crime, and with a supposed shelter from every punishment. It tempts them to rush into danger from the mere expectation of immunity, and, when practiced with frequent success, it teaches them to confound the gradations of guilt, from the effects of which there is, in their imaginations, at least one sure and common protection. It corrupts the early simplicity of youth, it blasts the fairest blossoms of genius, and will most assuredly counteract every effort by which we may hope to improve the talents and mature the virtues of those whom it affects.

☞"Elder, will you have a drink of cider?" inquired a farmer of an old temperance man, who was spending the evening at his house.

No, I thank you, said the old man, I never drink liquor of any kind, 'specially cider—but if you call it apple juice, I do not care if I take a leetle.

☞ The great race between a night-mare and a clothes-horse came off a short time since. The man who entered the mare wasn't wide awake, so the horse took the prize.

SPRING AND SUMMER.

S. HATHAWAY

RESPECTFULLY announces to his friends and customers, that he has just returned from the East, with one of the heaviest and best selected stock of Goods that he has heretofore introduced into this market.

The knowledge that he has acquired, by paying strict attention to the wants and wishes of this community, for nearly so years, is deemed a sufficient guaranty of his ability to make such selections in his purchases, as cannot fail to please all that may see proper to patronize him.

His stock comprises every article that can be found in any similar establishment; and was selected with especial care, both as regards cost and material. It is unnecessary to go into detail and mention every article; but he would ask the special attention of the ladies in particular, to his rich and splendid stock of dress goods, consisting in part as follows:

Plain and fig'd Silks,

Twelfth year of the

LOUISVILLE WEEKLY COURIER;

The Largest, Best, and Cheapest

Paper in the West!

In issuing the Prospectus for the twelfth year of the WEEKLY COURIER, we find that it is only necessary to offer the past as an earnest of what we will do in the future. Our circulation is now larger by thousands than that of any other paper in the State, and our readers may be assured that the COURIER will by the energy and industry of its management, fully maintain its position as its high character as a reliable and valuable newspaper.

Its NEWS, LITERARY, COMMERCIAL, MISCELLANEOUS and AGRICULTURAL Departments are in the hands of the editors, who have secured the services of competent assistants, and will receive and merit the attention.

We have in preparation several attractive novelties for the new volume, one of which is

A POPULAR PRIZE STORY,

WRITTEN BY MISS MATTIE GRIFFITH, expressly for the Louisville Courier. We do not hesitate to promise that it will be one of the most successful efforts of the popular writer. Miss Griffith is now busily engaged in writing the story and its publication will be commenced early in January. It will be follow by several other original stories from well known writers.

Politics will not occupy our columns to the exclusion of news and miscellaneous matter; and no pains or expense will be spared to make the Courier an acceptable visitor in the family, and an indispensible aid to the man of business.

Notwithstanding the great increase in the price of the paper upon which the Courier is printed, and the large addition to our expenses generally, THE PRICE OF SUBSCRIPTION WILL REMAIN THE SAME! We expect to make up the all deficiency by the increase of our list, and ask the aid of our friends to that end. We wish it distinctly understood, however, that we ask no man's patronage who does not think the paper is richly worth the very small price charged for it.

OUR TERMS.

We still adhere rigidly to the CASH SYSTEM, and never intend to deviate from it. At the following prices, the WEEKLY COURIER is, unquestionably,

THE CHAPEST PAPER IN THE WEST!

AFFLICTED READ!

PHILADELPHIA MEDICAL HOUSE, Established 20 years ago by Dr. KINKELIN, corner of Third and Union sts. between Spruce and Pine, Philadelphia, Pa.

INVALIDS are apprised that Dr. Kinkelin confines his practice to a particular branch of medicine, which engages his undivided attention. He cautions the unfortunate against the abuse or mercury (it destroys one annually out of every 100). Recent affections are promptly extinguished.

TWENTY YEARS OF EXPERIENCE

In the treatment of a class of diseases hitherto neglected and imperfectly understood, has enabled Dr. Kinkelin, (Author of a work on Self Preservation, to prove that nine tenths of the causes of nervous debility, lost and constitutional weakness, mental and physical suffering, are traceable to certain habits, forming the most exquisite and dangerous blights of domestic misery and premature mortality.

TAKE PARTICULAR NOTICE.

There is an evil habit sometimes indulged in by boys in solitude, often grow up upon them before manhood, and which, if not reformed in the time, not only begets serious obstacles to matrimonial happiness, but gives rise to a series of protracted, insidious, and devastating affections. Few of those who give way to this pernicious practice are aware of the consequences, until they find the nervous system shattered, feel strange and unaccountable feelings, and vague fears in the mind. The unfortunate victim affected becomes fickle, irritable, loses his wonted natural vigor, or he applies his mind to study, his sleep is tardy and weak, he is dull, languid, and engages in his sport without energy than usual.

If he communicate himself before the practice has done its worst, and enter matrimony, his marriage is unfruitful, and his aware tells him that this is caused by his early follies. These are considerations which should awaken the attention of those similarly situated.

MARRIAGE

Requires the fulfillment of several conditions, in order that it may be really the cause of mutual happiness. Could the veil which covers the origin of domestic wretchedness be raised, and its true source in every instance disclosed—how many could it be traced to physical disqualifications and their attendant disappointments! Apply then while it is yet time, in order to have your unstrung and relaxed organization retrieved, invigorated and strengthened.

REMEMBER,

He who places himself under Dr. Kinkelin's treatment may religiously confide in his honor as a gentleman, and rely upon the assurance, that the secrets of Dr. K.'s patients will never be disclosed.

Young man let no false modesty deter you from making your case known to one who, from education and respectability, can certainly be a friend to you.

Too many think they will conceal the secret in their own hearts and cure themselves. Alas! how often is this a fatal delusion, and how many a promising young man, who might have been an ornament to society, has faded from the earth.

Stictures of the urethra are rapidly removed by the application of a new therapeutical agent, used only by Dr. K. Weakness and constitutional debility promptly cured, and full vigor restored.

COUNTRY INVALIDS

Can have by stating their case explicitly, together with all their symptoms per letter enclosing a remittance) Dr. K.'s medicine, appropriately accordingly.

Forwarded to any part of the United States, and packed so as to prevent DAMAGE or CURIOSITY.
