

BLOOMINGTON PROGRESS.

$2.00 Per Year—In Advance.

WILLIAM A. GAGE, Editor and Proprietor.

OFFICE, North Side of the Public Square, in Old Post Office Hall Building.

—Every State in the North, and all in the South except seven, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Missouri, Texas and Tennessee, have gone for Grant.

—The majority for Grant in New York is now figured from revised returns at 47,717, and that of Gen. Dix for Governor at 48,851. It may be remembered that New York is the State that the Greeleyites were to carry by 100,000.

—O'Conor appears to have polled here and there a few votes, possibly 25,000 in the whole United States; and in Ohio a couple of hundred were thrown away on the Black,—James Black of Pennsylvania, Temperance candidate.

—The St. Louis Globe says: "Schurz, and Sumner, and Banks, and Fenton, and Palmer, and McClure, and Julian, and scores of lesser lights, have all gone out in rayless darkness. The political fortunes of these men are forever blotted."

—The Republicans made a gallant fight in Kentucky, and came near redeeming the State. In 1868 Grant was beaten 76,323; in 1871 Harlan was beaten for Governor 36,986. Now Greeley carries the State by about 9,000. One more rub like that will wipe out the Democratic majority entirely.

—POLITICS AND THE WEATHER.—Then we both laughed, and got on to politics. That fellow cussed everything. His fence rails had warped, his pumpkins had withered, his watermelons were dried up, his corn stunted, and his cows lame, all on account of a dry spell of weather.

Says I, "There is only one way to remedy this."

Says he, "How?"

Says I, "Vote for the right man."

Says he, "What's voting got to do with it?"

Says I, "A good deal. Haint the Administration at Washington held the reins of Government for four long years, and right through that dry spell, when you were praying for rain, didn't they hold on to those reins and not let you have a darned bit?"

Says he, "By gosh, that's so."

I don't know whether I converted him or not, for just then the cars stopped at Marcellus, and he got out.—John, in the N. Y. Sun.

The Result.

It is safe to say that no Presidential election in this country has brought such surprising results as that of the 5th inst. Republicans expected a victory, and sensible Democrats must have anticipated defeat; but such overwhelming majorities and such startling results, both in general and detail, have astounded both parties alike. The total number of votes in the electoral college is 366; of these Grant will receive 279, or about four-fifths of the whole. He carries thirty States out of thirty-seven, and his popular majority will exceed 500,000, by far the largest popular majority ever given to any President. The largest popular majority ever given any President before was for Lincoln, in 1864, who received 408,078 over McClellan. Gen. Grant and the Republican party may therefore be said to have received the most extraordinary endorsement ever accorded by the American people to any party or candidate. And this endorsement is not the result of any popular freak or whim. It is no political "scratch." It is the deliberate and well considered action of the people who, after the most searching scrutiny, found that the true interests of the country would be best subserved by such action. It signifies that the principles and policy of the Republican party are in the main approved by an overwhelming majority of the people, and that General Grant is considered an eminently safe man to stand at the helm for four years more. All good men will unite in the hope that the party and the President will prove themselves fully worthy of this unparalleled endorsement.

Among the particular features of the wonderful victory the following are worthy of special note and rejoicing: Banks of Massachusetts, one of the latest and least excusable of the renegades, has been defeated; his next expedition will be up Salt river instead of Red river. Trumbull, the most selfish and treacherous of politicians, is thrown higher than a kite. Sam Cox, one of the wildest of Democratic demagogues, is beaten in New York; Tipton, the moon-eyed blatherskite of Nebraska, has been peregrinately laid on the shelf; Fenton, the Mephistopheles of New York politics, has been doubled up and sent to grass; Schurz has been taught that no man's breeches pocket is big enough to carry the whole German vote safely; in short, all the enemies of the Republican party have met with such signal overthrow that they will not be likely to thrust their advice on the country to any great extent for some time to come.

Alvin E. Sanderson, of Sunderland, Mass., recently did so mean a thing as to cause the arrest of his mother on trumped-up charge of stealing his shovel and tongs. The Judge dismissed the case with a sharp reprimand of the plaintiff son. He was a "son-of-a-yank."

—HO! FOR SALT RIVER.—(Continued.)
The passenger steamer, Liberal-Democrat, commanded by Horace Greeley, B. Gratz Brown, Mate; Carl Schurz, Pilot; will leave for Salt River to-day. She will have a large passenger list, made up of Democrats and Liberal Republicans, and those Great men who were defeated at the State elections will have to apply soon, if they want a passage. The Steward, Lyman Trumbull, has provided a large supply of the best market afford, including a plentiful supply of "Crow" and "Old Bourbon." The passage will be a splendid one, as the men in command have been there before, and know the channel as well as the climate. The steamer will leave promptly and will be shovved off by jubilant Rads, and indignant Bourbons.

Elder Lee.

A Mormon Leader Loses in Indiana.
From the Indianapolis Evening Journal.

Elder Lee, one of the seventy saints of Utah, has been sojourning in Monroe and adjoining counties of Indiana for a number of weeks, during the past summer. He is engaged in a secret mission, delegated by no less a power than Brigham Young himself. We enjoyed the happiness of a short conversation with him while waiting for the train at the depot. He was introduced as one of the saints, and his appearance was not calculated to prepossess one in favor of them. He was mean looking and shabbily dressed. His face was an odd mixture of cunning and ignorance, the effect of which was heightened by a disagreeable habit of looking behind him, and glancing out of the corner of his eye. He wore an old pair of corduroy pantaloons, grievously soiled, and a world too wide for him. His coat had been green but was faded and some what torn. A very large grease spot set off the back of it between the shoulders. He seemed to have a great deal of trouble with his handkerchiefs. He carried two, a brand new silk one, and one so torn that it would scarcely hold together. He was warm, and constantly essayed to wipe the perspiration off his manly brow, first getting out the ragged handkerchief for the purpose, then substituting for it the good one. It never occurred to him to put them in different pockets, so the funny routine of getting out the dilapidated one and furtively secreting it was constantly repeated.

It talking, he balanced himself first on one foot and then on the other, accompanying the seesaw with a slinging motion of the right arm. It transpired that he was a weaver by trade, which accounted for the peculiar gestures. He preaced every remark he made, and even his replies, with the words "suffice it to say," which made his conversation very absurd. For instance, when asked if Brigham Young had really fed the country, he answered:

"No; suffice it to say that he did go away but has returned. Suffice it to say he is not the bad man he is represented to be. He is not a murderer. Suffice it to say when he was arrested he was not placed in confinement. Suffice it to say the force which arrested him expected opposition—expected resistance—but when they said to Prophet Young, 'You are my prisoner,' he said, 'I am at your service gentlemen.' Suffice it to say he took them by surprise. They said, 'We will not take you with us; when we want you we will come for you.' Suffice it to say that was the way to arrest a murderer. He is a great and good man, and suffice it to say he will come out all right in the end."

"You are in fellowship with the Mormons?" we asked.
"Suffice it to say I am. I am one of the Seventy."
"How many wives have you?" we ventured to inquire.
"Suffice it to say I have two."
"Do you like them both the same?"

"Precisely. Suffice it to say I can see no difference. They are the best of friends. Suffice it to say we are sisters. I married the second one to please the first. We have seventeen children between us. Suffice it to say the last wife had twins, which gave her the odd number."

The man did not look able to support one wife, let alone two, and nearly a score of children, but we are told that he has plenty of money at his command. He was very illiterate, but what he lacked in knowledge he made up in fanaticism, and he is considered one of the most successful proselyters of the Mormon faith. It is his practice to strike out into the country and rural districts, where he finds numerous converts among the poor, weak-minded and ignorant. Representing Utah as a land flowing with milk and honey—the modern Canaan, in fact he furnishes the converts, if necessary, with means of transportation thither. It would make too long a chapter to chronicle his success with the fair sex. Suffice it to say, that each old maid and widow who espouses his faith is firmly persuaded that she will be "sealed" to him when she reaches the Happy Land of Saints.

—Isaac M. Brown, editor of the Sullivan Union, lost his two youngest children—aged one and three years—last Friday week. They died only a few hours apart, and were buried in one coffin.
