The Rev. Geo. O. Barnes

has fairly outstripped the Boy Evangelist Harrison as a sensational revival preacher in the West. His meetings attract crowds in Louisville.

His bottle of oil is still in request, and with it he anoints the foreheads of all converts. But he is something more than grotesque. His power of oratory is remarkable. He can make his audience roar with his comical mimicry or weep by his pathetic. Again, he carries their feelings by storm. "This is a poor body for an immortal soul," he exclaimed, indicating his by no means robust physique, "but I have in this breast the element of eternal life."

It is a poor, hunched and worthless body, but the soul is there. I can feel it throbbing and throbbing like a big engine in some battered old ship. With every turn of the great wheels, and his hands, trembling with energy, describe the revolutions from his elbow, his body shaking with suppressed strain, and his eyes lighted up with intense fire—"with every turn of the great wheels the old bulk trembles and groans and quivers; it may go to pieces, but the engine throbs on stronger and better than the bulk, full of power and life." He tells his converts that they need never be ill if they lead perfectly holy lives, in which case they would be caught up to heaven without dying.

Among the most ghastly murders of the age was that perpetrated by James K. Wilcox, at Lancaster, Ky., a few nights ago. The murderer was a well-to-do, respected farmer, aged about 60 years. Suddenly in the night time he became a raving maniac and with a sharp ax, murdered his aged mother, in her 90th year, his wife and two daughters. He made a desperate effort to murder a grown son and one aged ten years, but after a desperate encounter they escaped. After this bloody work Wilcox went to his barn and hung himself with a plow line.

The papers in California contain much information as to grape culture in that State. The St. Helena Star says: "Last summer a certain forty-acre tract, nineteen of which was in vines, was offered for $4,500. Parties thought it too high. This fall the vineyard alone yielded $2,500 worth of grapes." The Anaheim Gazette reports: "It is said that there are tons of grapes rotting in the vineyards at Westminster, the owners being conscientious temperance people, who would rather see the fruit waste than sell it to the winemakers."

There is at Sydney, Australia, an exhibition a house built of paper. The entire furniture, including chandeliers and a stove, is of paper. So too are the carpets and curtains; and there is not only a large paper bed, but also paper blankets, sheets, quilts, and female underclothing, dresses, and bonnets in the latest style. It is proposed to give a series of banquets in this building, at which the plates, dishes, knives, forks, and drinking utensils shall be also of paper—everything, in fine, except the eatables.

The ancient penalty of death for burglary is still retained in North Carolina, and during the month of May, four persons were executed in the State for this crime—two of whom were white and two black.

HER SISTER NAT.—A west end door bell rang the other day, and was answered by the lady of the house. A man—a strange man—stood on the veranda, and he was surrounded the widow by this curious question: "Where's your sister Nat?"

The lady looked dazed, concluded she had misunderstood the question, and said so. He calmly repeated the inquiry. "Where's your sister Nat?" Believing him to be a lunatic, or at the wrong house, she said, decidedly: "I have no sister Nat." Then the veil was rent asunder and light beamed upon the interrogator's brain. "Oh, I didn't mean your sister; I meant your sister-in-law. Where is it?" I've come to fix it."—Indianapolis Review.

Victims for the "European Tramps."

—New York Sun: There is a scarcity of sauerkraut in the market, as the lovers of that product look at the present supply. The cabbage crop has been a comparative failure, and it has been found expedient to send to Germany for sauerkraut to supply a part of the German-American demand. In New York there is almost no market at all for the imported article, because the cabbage crop in the suburbs has been sufficient for the local supply. But the people who really pine for sauerkraut, and for whom it has been imported recently, are the new German settlers in the Western States. Hundred of packages have been sent to them from Fatherland. A shipment of 100 casks reached here the other day in a damaged condition—that is, the packages were more or less broken. It has been said to be impossible to spoil the sauerkraut itself. These hundred casks were sold by auction in Burlington slip yesterday noon for $11.25 a cask. Before this was all sold another cargo of prime sauerkraut arrived on a Bremen steamer, most of it consigned to an Indiana firm—Dunn & Co., of Bloomington.

—Sweet sings a nineteenth century poet: "What will heal my bleeding heart?" Lint, man, lint; put on plenty of lint. Or hold a cold door-key to the back of your neck, press a small roll of paper under the end of your lip, and hold up your left arm. This last remedy is to be used only in case your heart bleeds at the nose.

—The best use farmers can put their corn-cobs to is to make fire kindlers of them by soaking them in coal oil thoroughly. If the cobs are dry they will absorb a quantity of oil, so that one cob will burn long enough to start the most obstinate fire.

—The Kendallville Standard says that Californians call "rainy season" is not a constant wet spell, but the most pleasant time of the year—with occasional rain, whereas during the rest of the year there is no rain at all, but that even then dust is well laid every night by a copious dew.

—We find the following paragraph floating around without credit: "Live out of doors as much as you can. It is the place for a man to be. It is good for the health. A distinguished physician was in the habit of saying: 'However bad the air may be out of doors, it is always worse in the house.' It is good for the temper. People who are always shut up in a house are apt to grow fretful and peevish. They are prone to acquire narrow views of things and to worry over trifles not worth considering. It is good for the whole character—for strength, hope, patience and fortitude. It expands and softens one's nature, and makes us more charitable."

Well Conducted Saloons. Eds. Monitor-Journal: In one of the dimmest rooms of this city lies the body of a young man, 25 years of age who, less than half a year ago, was stabbed to death in one of the places of which the Indianapolis People says: "This is a free country and well conducted saloons are yet in order!"

Less than two months ago, a young man, roaring with pain and bleeding from a dozen wounds, was seen to come reeling and staggering from one of these places. He went but a little distance, when he fell heavily and was picked up dead. The people would think nothing of this, for "This is a free country and well conducted saloons are yet in order!"

If it should ever happen that a son or other relative of the People meets a like fate, if it should live to see reverses and death's heads come from such influences, let its proprietor console himself with the thought that "This is a free country and well conducted saloons are yet in order!"

If the People to-day can recall the case of a family wrecked, the little children separated from one another, the property taken from them, their home turned to others, the mother cold in death, and the father imprisoned for murder, and because of rum, let it repeat, (so that the mother rocking her dimpled babe to sleep, or the father just sending his son to his college home) may read, "This is a free country and well conducted saloons are yet in order!"

Will not the mothers, wives, sisters, and all others having dear ones drinking and gaming away their time, while the lonely days and dreary nights drag their weary lengths along, fail to agree with the People in this declaration?

Will not the noble men and women who are planting the temperance banner upon conquered territory every day, fail to see wherein the editor of the People differs from the common enemy of mankind, the whiskey interests?

Will not the poor drunkard, who is struggling manfully to overcome his appetite and to avoid such places, turn away with unfeigned loathing from a paper which could encourage, "This is a free country, and well conducted saloons are yet in order?"

V. H. MONROE, Indianapolis.

—There is a perfect epidemic of small pox in Chicago and the health officers are becoming alarmed. Both pest houses are full and yet not half the cases are reported to the board.

French Thrift.

A writer in noting the fact that the French people came forward with offers of so much money to take up the recent loans, ascribes it to their well known thrift. Especially in this case in the country portion of France. It is almost the universal rule there that every small farmer has money in government loans, or in the school or other savings banks. Thrift and economy is their watchword, and nothing is lost. And yet these people live well, and enjoy life equally as well if not better than any people on earth. It is true they do not sit down to dine off an immense roast beef that costs many shillings, as does the Englishman, nor have they as many kinds of puddings and pies for dessert as has the American, but they have the best plate of soup to be anywhere found, some sweet and wholesome rye bread, plenty of vegetables and fruit, and some delicious light wine. They do not lay in a case of goulash as John Bull does with his rare beef, or an incipient case of dyspepsia as the Yankee does with his pie and things, but they enjoy their dinners in a rational way. And one beauty of those dinners is that a half dozen of them can be had for what people of the same class in this country or England put for one. All their system of economy is not embraced in their eating and drinking, but extends to every department of life. Their clothing while being less rich is better made than other people's. Why, a French woman will dress so as to look like a princess on what some of our people throw away as old clothes. And the men are just as economical in building their houses and in raising and caring for their stock. But above all are they economical with their lands. Not an inch is wasted. Every foot is cultivated. What will not grow grain, will grow grass; what will not grow grain will grow roots or vines, and what will grow nothing else will grow trees. All is made available. These are their secrets of success, easily learned while young, but very difficult to transplant.

The U. S. Senate from the Gallery.

Peck's Sun.

From the private gallery of the senate I looked down on the grave senators, and I must say that I was not awe-stricken to any great extent. It is a State Legislature on a little larger scale. David Davis came in with a minister, and David Leach his three hundred pounds of brain, etc., against the desk while the preacher prayed. There were about ten senators present while the prayer was being uttered, but after the minister had said his amen the rest of them came in. I am told they are not very regular at prayers. They stay in their pleasant committee rooms until the danger from prayer seems to be over, and then they flock in. These senators do not impress one with their greatness as much when they are all together as they do when you take them one at a time. Saturday I went into a bar room to get a glass of ginger ale, and I was introduced to a senator who was taking a drink of whisky. As he turned it down, he looked about with an impression of true devotion, and I felt that he must be a great man, pious and good. But when the minister was praying that Monday morning, and this senator was chewing a cigar and looking at a copy of the Police Gazette, I must say that his greatness received a shock.

—The rise in real estate in New York City is said to be unparalleled. One piece of property on Broadway, which was sold one year ago for $280,000, changed hands recently at an advance of $95,000, and the demand for dwelling houses and property for business purposes seems to be a long way ahead of the supply. Houses that have been renting at $1,200 a year are eagerly sought after at $2,000, and this in respectable but not ultra-fashionable neighborhoods.

What the Jury Thought.

The following extract from an interview with a juror in the Guiteau case will be of interest: "Longley, the fourth juror impaneled, in telling the story of the verdict, said: 'We were not long in getting our verdict ready. We were fifty minutes absent from the court room, and half an hour of that time was taken up in reading the indictment. We took two ballots. On the first we stood eleven for conviction and one blank. That was cast by the German, who was a little doubtful on one point, and wanted to be instructed. He didn't understand the instructions as to the question of insanity thoroughly. It only took a moment to satisfy him, and then, when a ballot was taken, we were unanimous for conviction.' We didn't express any opinions to each other during the trial, but I think we all knew pretty well what the general feeling was." Being asked to give some idea as to how the events of the trial impressed the jury, particularly the interruptions of Guiteau and the speeches, he said: "It was all very tedious. There was so much that was gone over and over again. The lawyers kept telling us day after day of things we were tired of hearing. We didn't mind Guiteau's interruptions, and we understood that Judge Cox was giving him liberty so as not to have another trial. Guiteau amused us sometimes. He took on at a terrible rate to-day, and gave Judge Porter a great deal of abuse. As to the speeches, I think Judge Porter's impressed the jury the most, but then none of the lawyers' speeches had any influence with us. We made up our minds from the evidence and from the instructions. We listened to Scoville with interest. He did very well, and stood up for Guiteau manfully; but he couldn't make anything out of the case. Judge Cox's instructions were clear and to the point. There was no mistaking them."
