The Visitors Were:

Members of City Council: A. J. Kistler, B. McClintock, J. S. Day, P. M. Kopley, John Shraden, John Newhouse, D. Lemon and Wm. H. Stephens.
Joseph Adams, Chief of the Fire Department.
James Spence, Engineer.
John Stafford, Fireman.
H. J. Reamer, Wharf Master.
H. Finn, City Marshal.
W. B. Jackson, Clerk.
M. M. Hurley, Postmaster.
Daniel Shraden, City Sexton.
J. B. Applegate, Editor of the New Albany Ledger.
A. H. Gwinn, New Albany Press.
Citizens: T. S. Bradford, John McQuiddy, H. M. Cooper, R. E. Burke, Andros Huncilman, E. W. Black, L. Stout, J. B. Frank and John Merker.

The committee of arrangements performed their work well, but were, and as a result all things were prepared for the reception of the New Albany visitors in due time, on Tuesday. The steam fire engine arrived in the morning on the freight train accompanied by an engineer and fireman, and was put in order before the hour for the arrival of the express train from the South.

Snow began falling early in the forenoon, and continued to fall during all the time of the ceremonies on the streets. At 12 o'clock the train arrived, bringing the New Albany guests, and a line of march was promptly formed for the National Hotel, where the visitors were to partake of dinner. The following was the order of procession:

Chief Marshal McKinney.
Bloomington Brass Band.
Steam Fire Engine.
Visitors, in Carriages.
Mayor and City Officers.
City Council.
Committee of Arrangements.
Citizens of Bloomington.

The dining-room was handsomely decorated with banners and mottoes, and the tables literally groaned beneath the smoking viands.

A stand had been erected in front of "the ruins," and it was two o'clock before the procession arrived at this place to take part in the presentation ceremonies.

The steam fire engine was placed in front of the stand, and around and about it and the speaker's stand, were congregated about 2,000 people, oblivious to the heavy fall of snow which melted, saturated and chilled all who were exposed to it. The programme at this place was as follows:

Music by the Band.
Prayer by Prof. Ballentine.
Address of Welcome by Hon. W. F. Bloomington, Master of Ceremonies.
Presentation of Visitors from New Albany, Indiana.

Presentation of the Engine, on behalf of the Citizens of New Albany, by J. B. Applegate, Esq., Editor New Albany Ledger.

Speech of Acceptance by Mayor of Bloomington, C. F. Dodds.
Address on behalf of Citizens, by J. R. East, Esq.

Short addresses by Hon. Robt. W. Miers, W. P. Rogers, H. H. Friedley, and Dr. Moss, Bloomington, and Messrs. Hurley, Stephens, McQuiddy, Kopley, Huncilman and Kestler, of New Albany.

Mr. Browning's address of welcome was as follows:

A few weeks ago there came to us an appeal for help from the towns and cities on the Ohio River that were inundated by the flood of 1883. With this appeal was a cry from men, women and children who had been made homeless and destitute of food and raiment. In response to these appeals from the suffering thousands, the good people of Bloomington and vicinity contributed in money, clothing and food $2,000, of which a large portion was sent to the city of New Albany. This contribution has truly been to the citizens of Bloomington, as "bread cast upon the waters," and is seen to-day in the presentation by the city of New Albany of a steam fire engine, by a committee of her citizens. And now, in behalf of the citizens of Bloomington, I most cordially welcome you gentlemen of the committee in this magnificent donation to this our city, and extend to you the hospitality of the ever generous hearted people of Bloomington.

Mr. Applegate's speech was as follows:

A few weeks ago the people living on the banks of the Ohio were overwhelmed by a dire calamity. The usually peaceful and beautiful stream rising in the Alleghany mountains and flowing along the borders of six great states, finally mingling its current with the "Father of Waters," had suddenly risen, burst its bonds and spread consternation and desolation in its course.

It is a grand sight to behold a majestic river rise nearly seventy feet above its usual level, but terrible in its grandeur—a mighty element moving with resistless force.

When the banks of that river are lined with great manufacturing; when its shores are dotted with peaceful and happy homes, such a raging torrent carries destruction and death in its flow.

Mingling with the roar of angry waters went up a cry of distress. It went not in vain. Soon came the answering cry, swift as lightning flash:

"Bloomington, Ind., Feb. 17.
At a meeting of citizens held to-night one thousand dollars was subscribed for the flood sufferers and a car load of provisions donated. In addition the city council gives five hundred dollars. There will be a collection taken up in the College and churches."

Other cities and towns and villages responded, and responded nobly. Their acts deserve to be inscribed in "letters of gold upon pillars of brass." They are recorded in thousands of grateful hearts, where they will be cherished through life.

A few days ago the same wires which bore tidings of aid and sympathy from the generous people of Bloomington to the suffering people of New Albany, bore a calamitous story of the ravages of fire, another element of destruction, which in a few hours laid waste a large portion of this beautiful city. Our hearts went out in sympathy for those who had remembered us so kindly in the day of our tribulation. With some of our citizens, Mr. Andros Huncilman and others, that sympathy took active practical form. A petition was circulated, numerous signed, and a generous council resolved to donate to Bloomington a steam fire engine to help ward off future devastating flames—not those Calvin and Wesley used to talk about—but those which may come in the near future.

By the partiality of friends it is made my pleasing duty, on behalf of the Mayor and Common Council and citizens of New Albany, to present to the City of Bloomington this useful as well as beautiful engine.

Well may we all hope that the services of the "Sanderson" may never be needed; but should the time of trial come, they will not be found wanting.

If called into active service may the stream of water poured out prove as strong, as swift and well directed as was the stream of charity poured out by the good people of Bloomington in our time of trouble. May a shiner of light upon the sparkling drops of water as they are hurled against the destroying flames, cause a rainbow, emblem of promise and hope, to span the scene, to remind us of the bond of friendship between the two cities, New Albany and Bloomington.

The response by Mayor Dodds was as follows:

GENTLEMEN—In behalf of the citizens of Bloomington, I accept this generous gift, and return their heartfelt thanks and gratitude to you, and through you to the Common Council and citizens of New Albany for this noble expression of your friendship. (Cheers.) You speak of the liberality of our people in the time of your distress. I will simply say our people gladly and freely done what they could to assist in relieving the suffering from the flood, asking and expecting no recompense, save the consciousness of having done their duty. This is a new era in the history of the world—something new under the sun. Behold! We see a city coming out of a deep, dark flood, bearing in its arms a magnificent steam fire engine, and casting it at the feet of a sister city as a token of gratitude and love. (Applause.) The chronic grumbler tells us that the world is getting worse. Now, is this true? In the light of this example of liberality it is not false. I am proud to say that I am a citizen of Indiana; a state that boasts of a city like New Albany that is governed by this spirit of liberality; a spirit of fraternal love. (Cheers.) Yes gentlemen, we accept this gift of you as a token of your friendship, hoping that in all time to come the bond that now binds us together may grow stronger and stronger, and remain unbroken forever. Again, gentlemen, thank you, and through you the citizens of New Albany, for this grand donation. Fellow citizens permit me, in conclusion, to express the hope that you will strive to perpetuate and strengthen the bond of fraternal brotherhood between the two sister cities, and may it ever grow brighter and brighter. (loud cheers.)

H. H. Friedley said:
"Ladies and Gentlemen and the Committee from New Albany.
I believe it has been announced in the papers that I would make an address on this occasion, but I assure you I will not do such a thing. All that I shall do is to say that I second everything that has been said from this stand to-day. But as the Railroad company has been mentioned, and as you have called me out especially in its interest, it may not be improper to say, that when the southern border of our beautiful state was visited by a calamitous flood, and you, as citizens and you farmers who I see before me, desired to aid these stricken people by sending them food and clothing instead of money, the Railroad company mentioned at once offered to carry all provisions and clothing thus contributed, free of charge. You did your duty nobly and car load after car load was conveyed to the suffering. Charges could have been made and collected, yet this 'Soul-less Corporation,' as many of you farmers choose to call it, when you chance to have stock killed, did this kind act in the interest of humanity. In a few days ago, when it was first rumored that the people of New Albany, in their goodness of heart, would present this city with a steam fire engine, Col. Young, President of the Road, at once telegraphed me that he would transport the engine and the committee accompanying it, from New Albany to Bloomington free of charge. But all that has been done by this company has been done by the same spirit and kindness, and has been manifested by individuals, and I did not come here to boast of it, but in obedience to your call, to make my bow in behalf of the Railroad company."

At the close of the speech making the engine was moved down to the cistern south of the bank, where it threw water in a very satisfactory manner during the next two hours.

The banquet was given at the Orchard House, Tuesday night, and was an immense success in every way. The fine taste and excellent judgment of the hostess, Mrs. Ella Orchard, was visible in all the arrangements, and every one who attended was delighted. The tables were handsomely spread, the rooms elegantly decorated, while the Bloomington Orchestra furnished music during the entire evening.

After the supper had been disposed of in a leisurely manner toasts were in order, Maj. Mulky acting as toast master. The toasts were as follows:

1. New Albany. Mr. Applegate, who was to respond, was not present and the rest of the visitors were too bashful to make a speech.
2. City of Bloomington, as it used to be. Response by Dr. J. G. McPheeters.
3. City of Bloomington, as it is now. Response by Richard A. Falk.
4. The Fire Department of New Albany. Response by Joseph Adams, Chief of Fire Department.
5. Pioneer Fire Company of Bloomington. Response by W. B. Hughes, Chief of Fire Department.
6. State University. Response by Dr. Moss, President of the University.
7. Relief Committee of New Albany. Response by M. M. Hurley, Postmaster of New Albany.
8. Relief Committee of Bloomington. Response by Rev. Brant.
9. Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railway. Response by H. H. Friedley.
