Monument to Dr. Nutt.
 It may not be generally known that the grave of Dr. Nutt lies unmarked by a monument, in one of the cemeteries of Greencastle. Dr. Nutt, in early years preached all over the northern and eastern portions of Monroe county, organized churches, raised the money to build them, and faced storm and flood when there were neither bridges to cross streams, nor roads to reach them. Every man in Bloomington will remember how honestly and continuously he worked for Indiana University while its President, and that he not only gave all of his time, but every dollar of his salary to promote its best interests, as he understood them. The Progress believes that the mere suggestion will be sufficient to induce the men he has patronized and befriended in other days to step forward and make a success of a Monument Fund.

That all may have an opportunity to contribute (and there are at least a thousand men and women in Monroe county who ought to do so) the Progress suggests, (after nominating Rev. J. E. Brant for Treasurer) that subscriptions be taken in sums not to exceed one dollar, and hereby tenders the treasurer that amount:

Wm. A. Gale, $1 00
 Give the Old Man a Chance.
 The celebration of Henry Ward Beecher's 70th birthday, in the midst of a host of friends, is suggestive. A thousand mocking divinities who are filling pulpits in Bangor and Rakepook and Hesperet, and cities of that size, and whose oratory thrills the hearts of the worshippers in the 15x25 churches of those hamlets, will feel that too much honor has been paid to the old man and his thousands and tens of thousands admirers. They will say that "he belongs to a past generation, and that the management of the church needs young blood injected into its veins." Yet it doesn't seem to strike them that Beecher has climbed to the top of his profession by sheer skill and courage. He began to preach in Lawrenceburg, Indiana, which was then a mere hamlet, but in a very few years he was at the head of the biggest church in his denomination, and to-day, at seventy, he talks as well as he did at twenty-five; better, for his genius is guided by experience. He is not in danger of taking up with the crude experimental notions that lure young orators into folly. He has grown better as he has grown older; all good things do.

You recollect, you old farmers, how thirty years ago no horse had trotted below 2:40! Well, Flora Temple came along and reduced the record to the twenties. As a colt she was speedy and beat all of the 2:40 tribe, but she was getting to be an aged mare when she clipped all of the young colts who were laughing at the seeming old record of their sires; so with Dexter, he was past his prime when he made the wonderful break of 2:19. Goldsmith Maid was no spring chicken when she put herself away at the head of the list by a 2:14 mile. And Maud S., after smothering everything on the track, waited till the fall of her fame seemed complete and all competition vanquished, before she coolly proceeded to demolish all ancient history by trotting down to 2:14. Some day she will do it 2:10, just for fun. And yet there are envious owners of young colts who allege that the time is not genuine, and say these were "old nags, and there are lots of young ones that can beat them," but all the same they don't do it. It is just as we said awhile ago, all good things improve with age. A good newspaper man at twenty-five is a better one at forty-five. The man who is a good jury lawyer at twenty-eight is a far better one at fifty-two, he has learned much. These new-fashioned notions must have their day. The cry for "young blood" and recklessness, has been heard and heeded to a certain extent, but after all it will be found that experience is as valuable in business men and political leaders, as hot blood and cheapness dash.

"Give the old men a chance"—they have managed well in other days, and have brought the nation and business interests to the present advanced condition—they are not still capable of doing so?

—Things one would rather have left unsaid: Amiable hostesses—"What! must you go already? Really, professor, it's too bad of this sweet young wife of yours to carry you off so early. She always does." Professor—"No, no, not always, Mrs. Bright. At most houses I positively have to drag her away."

—Mrs. Fields has bought an interest in Lane & Buskirk's corner store.

IRON RAILROAD CARS.
 It has struck an ingenious friend of ours, that iron railroad cars should take the place of our present fire-trap coaches. Improvements are taking place in every thing, but the wooden railroad car is still preserved. Telescoping, rolling over embankments, splintered cars, and the invariable fire, have become such familiar American occurrences, the public mind, it is opined, cannot be very easily turned from their contemplation, and the delightfully pen-painted accounts of them in the newspapers! And yet the advantages of the iron coach over the wooden one are apparent, after a moment's consideration. Not indeed as a material more suitable for a life destroying trap, but, on the contrary, as near an approach to an absolute preservation of life as railroad traveling will permit.

The iron car would not take fire in case of accident! This advantage alone, if it possessed no other, should recommend its adoption. In the matter of telescoping, for instance: it is doubtful if that familiar feat could be accomplished at all, but certain it is, that passengers would escape being spilt in their seats by flying splinters. And again, in rolling over an embankment, while it is true the passengers would execute the same gymnastic and acrobatic feats they are so often called upon to perform in the wooden coaches now in use, it is absolutely safe to state, the car—while it would be dinged and battered—would not break to pieces, nor would heavy beams securely fasten struggling passengers, while they were being roasted to death! Indeed, it is possible, save and except the shaking up a person would receive in the rolling over of the iron coach, that neither life nor limb would be endangered, much less being brained by a fallen beam, split by a flying splinter, or roasted to a turn at the bottom of a ravine.

—Greencastle Banner: Mrs. J. F. Fee, and Miss Minnie Harbison, go to Bloomington to-day, for a two weeks visit.

L. S. Field and wife, of Bloomington, visited Capt. J. F. Fee, yesterday, on their way to Illinois.

—Ben Smith's son, William, came near being crippled for life, on Tuesday of last week. A passenger coach was being switched through the depot, and he jumped between the frame office and the steps. He was badly squeezed about the hips, and although no bones were broken, the muscles were so lacerated that he has since been confined to his bed, unable to move without assistance.

—The storm of Monday night a week prostrated a number of shade trees in Bloomington. Trees were lying across the roadway on north College Avenue so thickly as to remind old soldiers of a morning "after the battle." Several members of the old 49th New Jersey Infantry have been talking about it since the storm.

Old Settler's Meeting.
 At Gosport, Thursday Aug. 9, 1883.
 As announced last year, the next annual meeting of this organization will be held on the same beautiful sugar-grove grounds at Gosport, Indiana, on Thursday, August 9, 1883. The district of this organization embraces the counties of Marion, Morgan, Hendricks, Putnam, Montgomery, Clay, Greens, Knox, Monroe, Lawrence, Brown and Owen. To accommodate delegations and individuals, the most ample and complete arrangements will be made. The Buskirk family—noblely of his, Indiana's giant, Capt. David V. Buskirk—prominent pioneers of the state, now scattered over nearly all the states of the Union, have already taken on steps to hold a reunion on our grounds that day. Many others will do likewise. Arrangements will be made for special trains on the L. N. & A. C. railroad.

—That handsome, three-ply doxskin sofa, that during the past sixty-eight years has graced Allison's "studio," has been covered with green and yellow truck. Seven generations have lived and huggled on that sofa.

—The Siamese account for cholera by declaring it to be produced by an exhalation which springs from the poison of a snake—the exhalation being blown over the world by a snake wind. Accepting this "scientific" view, would it not be well for Northern newspapers to cease copying southern snake stories?

—A portion of the Jackson, Mich. copper mine accidentally caved in, revealing a large body of excellent ore, the existence of which had never been suspected. It is clean, and nearly forty feet thick.

—Like "hot cakes" the goods at Mose Kahn's clothing store are now going off. He is selling at cost. Now for gains.

Just received, one car load of Buckeye Reapers and Mowers. Call and see them. They are the best machines in the field, (a fact) and don't you forget it. For light running, clean work, and durability, they cannot be surpassed.
