"Doc" Walker, colored, was hanged at Tennessee. He had murdered a negro named Lucas Grant, last January, over a boot trade.

An extraordinary accident occurred on the Virginia Midland Railway, near Lynchburg, Va. As the train approached a bridge over the James River the conductor whistled and the engine stopped. The train was stopped; neither could the ordinary brakes be applied. The train rushed on the bridge, an old structure, with tremendous force. The girder gave way and the two Pullman cars were thrown into the river. The passenger coach projected over the river and the engine could not be hauled from the trucks and stranded on the water, giving time for the rescue of the occupants. All the passengers escaped without hurt, as if by a miracle. The conductor, who displayed great courage and presence of mind, was considerably hurt. A brakeman also sustained considerable injury.
