Butter Making.

FLAVOR, GRAIN AND COLOR.
ARE THE THREE POINTS
THAT DETERMINE
THE GRADE OF BUTTER.

The first is dependent on a great many small things: the milk must not be kept too long in the barn; it must not be set in a room with vegetables or coal oil, nor in a mouldy, damp cellar. The vessels containing it must be scalded and aired after each skimming. It must not sit too long before skimming, nor too long before churning. I have tried shallow setting in crocks and pans, and deep setting in jars, tin cans and glass, both covered and open, with the following results: At 60 deg. the shallow setting gets more cream and the tin pans a better flavor, easier handled, and sweeter, as the most highly glazed earthen ware will absorb more or less of the milk. Covering I found prevented the dry coat on top of the cream which is one of the causes of streaky butter. It must not be covered until the milk is cold and animal heat and odor evaporated. Under 60 deg. by all means use deep setting as a great saving of labor. Submerging is preferable, as it keeps a more even temperature. My best butter has been made by the use of glass cans, submerged after the milk was cooled for about an hour. I use Kneeland's Crystal Creamer. At 45 deg. cream will rise in six hours, at 50° or over 24 hrs. A frequent stirring of the cream when ripening, and a pint of water to each gallon of cream when churning, is beneficial.

The grain of butter is injured by over working too warm cream, and a dasher or paddle churn. Churns made on the concussion principle are used by all creameries, and took the premium at the Dairy Exhibit in New Orleans, at the World's Fair. I use the Davis Swing Churn because it is easier handled, but it makes no better butter than any other dasher churn. 60 deg. in summer and 62 in winter are the regulation rules in churning. I wash my butter in the churn. First churn off the butter milk, then pour in several buckets of water, not less than 60° and churn, draw off the water, and add fresh, continuing this until the water drawn off is perfectly clear. An ounce of dairy salt to the B. is the general rule; Chicago market a little less, and Southern market a little more. An ounce to the pound will be found satisfactory for Louisville, Indianapolis and Cincinnati. I have found a linen parchment covering the cheapest and best. It does not absorb grease nor moisture and keeps the butter nearly air tight.

The last point, coloring, is easily managed. When on grass it is not usually needed, but in winter a little put in the cream when commencing to churn will add greatly to the appearance of the butter. Hansen or Fargo is the best I have used. An inferior coloring will ruin the flavor and injure the keeping quality of the butter. Always color a little under rather than above the natural June tint.

A clean, warm barn, rapid and thorough milking with both hands, kind and gentle treatment of the cows, so loud talking or profanity, are the rules that govern this department of our dairy. The increase in the yield of milk more than pays us even if we were attacked by no higher motive. I am told by a pupil of the celebrated horse-tamer Rarey, that Kindness was the fundamental principle on which he worked, and we have found it eminently successful in the management of cows.

—The great crowds of ladies that during the past week have been investigating the stock of goods now being received by McCalla & Co., have made a verdict and it has been duly recorded. The verdict is, as every one had reason to believe, that no such stock of goods had ever before been brought to town. Stocks as large doubtless have been, but none apparently so choice. One among the specialties is the immense stock of ribbons in delicate colors. These ribbons are a part of the stock that had just been brought from the east by Marshall Field, the Chicago wholesaler, and are said by judges to be the most beautiful and delicate colors made. In gingham, also, the new stock is replete with choice patterns and well made fabrics. In fact the stock of gingham is uncommonly large, as these goods are coming into use more than ever. It is always a specialty with McCalla & Co. too, to keep the best stock of strictly first-class dress goods that money will procure, and here the firm has done better than usual, in that they have brought on a stock of dress goods from which no lady can fail to select a pattern that will please both herself and her friends. The new styles and colors in kid gloves are also worthy the attention of lady purchasers, as they are the first that have been brought to the place since the new spring goods have been placed on the eastern markets. The novelties in parasols, fans, etc., are coming, and consignments of the newest the latest and the best will arrive each week during the season. It will really be to your advantage to call before the stock just received has been picked over.

—Indianapolis Journal: It is possible to elect a President without New York; it is not possible to elect one without New York and Indiana both. Will not General Harrison receive a support in New York equal to that of any other man who may be named? While with him the fifteen electoral votes of Indiana will be as certain as any human event can be.

—In Thomasco, Georgia, a young man was stoned to death by several neighbors boys, because, as they said he wore "stare clothes." His murderers said he was "too uppity." This is Southern civilization.

DON'T FORGET TAXES.

The Third Monday of April is the last day for paying State and County Taxes without penalty. It will be to your advantage to attend to this duty soon, and not to wait till the last hour, when the business must be done hurriedly and sometimes unsatisfactorily.

Don't neglect it.

 Treas. Monroe county.

—The Atlanta Constitution says: "The anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birthday calls renewed attention to the fact that he was the only really great man in the country that ever belonged to the Republican party." The Constitution, however, fails to explain why it has been so long discovering the fact, and why its distinguished friend, Jeff. Davis, does not agree with it in the premises.

—Rev. J. S. Hughes, whom the Prohibitionists nominated for Governor last week, is a minister of the Christian church, having been located for several years at Richmond, but he now lives at Irvington. Two years ago he was the Prohibition candidate for State Secretary, and since then he has given almost his entire attention to prohibition work. He is comparatively a young man and a stirring speaker.

—A sad spectacle is that of the Confederate soldiers in the Senate—the men who did their best to destroy the government—denouncing the Grand Army as professional mendicants. With the Confederate party in power, these "professional mendicants" don't stand much show for anything.

—A swindler is just now going from house to house in this part of the State says a writer to the Indiana Farmer, claiming to be an expert in the laundry business. He claims that anyone can do as nice work for his work is small, trifling enough in itself, but he is one of many just such impostors, going around with something new, that people know nothing about. I have a rule, which I think has saved me something and which when adhered to, bars out all such impostors. It is this: "Never take in with anything new from a stranger." There are plenty of other ways by which a thing of real merit may get to us than by the hands of strangers.

—Chicago claims that the great number of divorce suits in that place is a natural sequence of being the great theatrical center of the country.
