In conversation with United States Pension Agent Ensley, at Indianapolis, a newspaper reporter learned that the last revolutionary war widow on the rolls of the Indianapolis office passed away about two years ago, though there are quite a number of widows of the war of 1812. In many of these cases the time of marriage these widows were very young, just entering their teens, while the veterans were in their eighties. The act of March 19, 1890, provides that widows receiving soldiers of the war for the Union after that date shall only receive $3 per month, those who have married previous to that date receive $12. This was probably done to prevent, as far as possible, adventurous young women from marrying old soldiers on speculation.

Last Thursday at Terre Haute Gottlieb Schell died under peculiar circumstances. On the 5th ult. he was slightly injured in a runaway accident, and a dog licked a bruise on his hand while it was still fresh. While he continued to work until Sunday last, his condition grew worse, and finally he was confined to his bed, the symptoms indicating hydrophobia, tetanus or lockjaw. He suffered untold agony. There is belief that his death is due to absorption of saliva while the dog was licking his injured hand.

The killing of four horses and prostration of twenty others which were hitched near a barbed wire fence while their riders were attending a funeral at Moberly, Mo., last week should serve as a warning to people caught in a field in a storm to keep as far as possible from wire or conductors of any kind. In another section of the same section that happened last week in Montgomery, Mo., New York, the fence carried but one line running along the top. This the lightning followed and it found a better conductor in a fence of three wires, over which two colts and two heifers were lying. The animals were all killed.

Boston Advertiser: Has anyone except a woman and a jeweler noticed the gradual, and of recent years, the rapid retirement of the ear-ring? Not many years ago a woman of three wore them. Little girls at school began to have their ears pierced, and heroically—if it may be called heroism—submitted to the painful puncturing of the delicate lobes of the ear only for the gratification of vanity. To-day, except among the Italian and Portuguese peasant women of the North End, the prudent ear-ring has almost wholly disappeared. A few still cling to the ear ornament in the shape of a stud, but the jeweler says that few women nowadays submit to the piercing process. Some whose ears are already punctured still wear their ornaments, but many use little artifices to conceal the traces of the needle.

Sensate Farwell had a little joke put on him not long ago, and though it cost him a $3 bill, he smiled grimly and thought it all in good part, says the Chicago Herald. The censor has for years employed a certain jeweler to clean and repair his watch when it needs attention. His name is Hoefner, and the censor has the fullest confidence in him. The censor's wife one day took his watch to Hoefner and was told to leave it for a few days. He did so and when he went after it and asked the expense he was told the bill was $5. He

Waist Deep in Money.

How the Lightning Ticket-Seller Does Business with Circus Devotees.

New York Press.
Tom Kelly, Barnum's ticket-seller, goes through the whole process of receiving the money, giving the ticket and making the change in three movements with the regularity of clockwork. The ticket window is about four feet above the bottom of the wagon. Mr. Kelly sits upon a high stool, with a large sum of money in dollars, halves and quarters piled upon a shelf on his right. A corresponding shelf on the left is covered with tickets and half tickets. All this is arranged before the window is opened. A line of several hundred impatiently clamoring people wait outside. Mr. Kelly climbs upon his stool, takes a long, deep breath and opens the window. Money is received in his right hand and the thumb of the left hand has in the meantime pushed a ticket from the pile, and the right hand has selected, mechanically, the change and presented it to the purchaser. No attempt is made to pile up the money received. It is literally dropped, and when the show commences Mr. Kelly sits like a buoy surrounded by a sea of money, the crowds of whose waves mount up to and press closely around his waist and almost on a level with the window ledge.

After the performance commences, and no more people want tickets, Mr. Kelly closes the window and steps carefully over this bed of money. Then, and not till then, is any attempt made to count and assort this sum, which amounts to several thousand dollars in pieces of all denominations.

When Boys Went Swimming.

Passages That Will Bring Smiles to the Faces of Grand and Robust Men.

[W.D. Howells in Harper's Young People.]
I wonder what sign the boys who read this have for challenging an inveterate swimmer to go swimming. The boys of the town used to make the motion of swimming with both arms; or they held up the forefinger and middle finger in the form of a swan's tail; they did this when it was necessary to be secret about it, as in school, and when they did not want the school crowd of boys to come along; and often when they just pretended they did not want one to know. They really had to be secret at times, for some of the boys were not allowed to go in at all, others were forbidden to go in more than once or twice a day; and as they all had to go in at least three or four times a day, some sort of sign had to be used that was understood among themselves alone. Since this is true history, I had better own that they all, at one time or other, have told lies about it, either before or after the fact, some habitually, some in great extremity. Here there a boy, like my boy's older brother, would not tell lies at all, even about going in swimming; but by far the greater number bowed to hard facts when he was threatened and then they would not go in, and then they said that they had not been in; but later, for which they had made this sacrifice, was apt to betray them. Either they got their shirts on or they side out in dressing or else when they were in some enemy came upon them and told their secrets. There are few cruelties which public opinion in the town would tolerate, but I am glad to remember to their honor that they would not many in that boy's town who would tell the truth, and I am glad to know that in those wicked days if you were such a miscreant and there was some boy who hated you, you stole up and tied the knot in his shirt, and then you put it in to your heart, you soaked the knot in water and pounded it with a stone. I am glad to know that in the days when he was threatened and then they would not go in, and then they said that they had not been in; but later, for which they had made this sacrifice, was apt to betray them. Blanching the Hair.

Recent analysis has shown that the preparations for bleaching hair "to the delicate golden shade so much admired by the court circles of Europe and the best society of the United States," to quote from the label on one of the bottles, all depend upon the discoloring and corrosive influence of nascent oxygen or nascent chlorine. The basis used in the various nostrums for this purpose are peroxide of hydrogen, aqua regia and bromine's acid. Peroxide of hydrogen is the mildest and most innocuous of the three named. It is a colorless liquid which destroys the natural color of the hair, and which, if used long enough, turns it an unnatural grayish white. It is rather expensive, and it is therefore used much less than the two other acids. It produces sores upon the scalp and gives rise to skin complaints that resemble tetter, salt-rheum and scald-head. The two acids are equally vile. They attack and eat the hair and skin alike. The former they partly bleach and partly burn to a handsome gold color; the latter they stain to about the same hue as does a light application of iodine. Besides the dermatologic troubles named, they cause malodorous hardy distinguishable from ozone and erythema. One curious disease that they cause is an inflammation of the cells of the hair follicles, and lymph, and often blood, is extravasated in appreciable quantities. All three bases produce falling out of the hair and premature baldness.

Star: Crawfordville has a family of the upper circle who has a cyclone cellar of the most approved style, to which they gain entrance through the cellar by a sort of tunnel arrangement. The apartment is walled up strongly and has a massive curbing that were the whole house to fall in, no harm would befall the occupants. It is supplied with comfortable rocking chairs, a lounge, bed-stuffing, blankets, a full supply of catables to last ten days, a lamp, and a can of coal oil. In the last few days the family have kept the tunnel warm night and day.

In hiding mistakes, the doctors seem to have the advantage.

An exchange says: "A doctor hides his mistakes in the graveyard, and a lawyer hides his in the Supreme Court."
