A Crawfordsville woman who carried some provisions to a poor family the other day found a man, woman, three children and five dogs all suffering for food. This case furnishes an impressive illustration of the inequalities which prevail under the social order of this country. It is cruel to starve so many dogs, and the industrious mechanics ought to be ashamed to let such families want for anything!

—Gee, Lew Wallace, of Crawfordsville, has the following recipe for the cure of rheumatism, that is said to be effective, as well as simple: "Apply a full strength mustard poultice, containing a little oil, to the hollows of both feet, and cover up in bed. Place a bed of bedding under you to be perspiration. Remain three to four hours, then turn over and wet bed. Remove any clothing for fear of taking cold. The lister the feet, see from the

The tea is then dried into a winnowing case, which separates the heavy from the light leaves and removes the dust. The light leaves and the dust go to make "brick tea."

The green teas are first dried in the shade and afterward dried in the same cylinders, but of which the concave separation is made by a plate of metal. Their color is preserved by means of indigo. It remains, then, only to make the mixture of teas of different localities. The teas are boxed and shipped all over the world. Speaking of Teas

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat says: "It is a common error to imagine that Chinese soil produces two kinds of tea—black and green. This is not true. The only difference between these teas is caused by the different manner in which the tea is prepared. A description of the manipulation to which the tea is subjected will show that green tea is only distinguished from black tea by the fact that the green tea has not been torrefied or dried by heat in the same manner as the black. The leaves once gathered are spread in light layers on straw mats. They are exposed to the sun until they are withered. They are then put in bamboo trays and are triturated by the foot. A part of the juice of the leaf escapes, and after this operation the leaves are exposed again, and again triturated and continually agitated. But the drying is still continued in rattan cylinders, which are separated into two parts by a bamboo partition. Underneath the cylinder is a chafing disk of ignited charcoal. The leaves are thrown on the concavity of the separation, which is furnished with a cover. From time to time the cover is raised, and the agitation is continued. When the leaves are completely dried the cultivator has finished his work.

The tea merchant then takes possession of the tea. He delivers the tea to women and children, who remove the stems of the leaves and the little wooden twig, which often remains attached to the young sprouts.

For black teas the leaves thus dried are put again in the cylinders above described. They are dried by the hand, and the of heating or torrefaction until all the leaves are a series of holes. Campbell, the Wood Chopper.

Makes the Biggest Record Ever Heard of in America—Hot Area.

The Annapolis Club met promptly in the roll call room at the Station House last night. Some of the members were talking of life on the farm in boyhood days. Captain Bob Campbell, who is big and fat, saw an opportunity to indulge in a bit of reminiscence.

"I was raised on a farm," said the Captain, and was taught to do all kinds of farm work from shearing sheep to whitewashing a fence. And, to be sure, I did everything well. I was the pride of the country. Whenever a country lad got lazy or preferred coming to town to working on the farm, his father used to say to him, 'James—that is if his name was James—why don't you get a bustle onto yourself! Look at Bob Campbell. See what a worker he is. Brings up, and some day you will make a rich man out of yourself.' Of course, you understand this made me feel proud, and I never knew what it was to rest. I have actually worked seventy-two hours on a stretch, and didn't think much about it. I wouldn't do it now, but in those days I enjoyed it. I had a great record as a woodchopper, and made big wages out of it. Fifteen or twenty cords a day was very ordinary for me, and as I got a dollar a cord from the neighbors when I worked for them, you notice I made plenty of money.

An old friend of my father's hired me one time to cut three hundred cords of wood. It was a pretty big job, but I was on my mettle and determined to tackle it. The logs were piled on the banks of a river in a clearing, and so I had plenty of room in which to swing my ax. I always used an ax weighing forty pounds. A young man who taught school and boarded at our house asked me to take him in on the job and I did so just to please him. For I knew that he couldn't cut more than five cords a day to save his life. Well, we started on the job. I had 160 axes at the wood pile by daylight and then I commenced. I cut so swift that the ax would get hot and my assistant would take them to the river and throw them in to cool them off. If this had not been done they would have melted right in the logs. At noon I had twenty-six cords cut and my axes were in such condition that I had to lay off. Bright and early the next morning I was at the wood pile to begin again, but the chips I had made the day before were falling in such a shower that I had to wait until the wooden rain ceased, which I imagined would be about 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Having nothing else to do, the school master and I strolled down the river bank about ten miles, and there we found a lot of farmers working hogs in the river. Placing my hot axes in the water had made the river boil like a cauldron, and the farmers took advantage of the hot water to butcher their hogs and prepare them for market. Our county history had one chapter devoted to this remarkable event.

—On one of the elevated railroads in Brooklyn, last week, a locomotive gradually slackened its speed and in a short time "died," which is the way the railroad men describe the unexpected giving out of an engine. On investigation, the engineer discovered a leak through which the water that should have kept the boiler full of steam was escaping into the street. The machinery was all there still. The wheels and rods and pistons were in proper shape. There seemed to be everything that was needed to make the locomotive do its work. And yet, it couldn't move an inch, nor drag a pound, because there was no steam to put life into the dead mechanism.

A bottle of South American Nervine will put enough steam into the human system to cause it to go to work again like a new machine. Faris Bros., sole agents.

State University Alumni.

(Indianapolis Journal.)

Fifty or sixty of the alumni of the State University met in the parlors of the Grand Hotel, Indianapolis, last Wednesday, to discuss the matter of asking the Legislature to amend the law so as to permit them to select a portion of the trustees. There was an almost unanimous sentiment in favor of the move, its only opponent being Dr. Jenckes, who presided over the meeting. Prof. T. G. Alford and E. P. Bicknell, of Indianapolis, Frank Drew, of Bloomington, and Professor Gillum of the State Normal School, warmly advocated the proposition, saying that it would do more than anything else to awaken interest and enthusiasm among the alumni of the State University. Dr. Jenckes opposed it on the ground that the alumni already had six of the eight trustees and cited the fact that on the Kenyon College, Ohio board the alumni had only four of the sixteen trustees. He thought things were going on pretty smoothly and nicely at the institution, and urged the alumni to bend their energies toward securing from the Legislature the $75,000 appropriation wanted. He deemed it inexpedient just now to press the alumni representation matter on the Legislature as it might jeopardize the appropriation above mentioned.

D. K. Goss of Lebanon, said that the trouble was more interest had been taken in the matter of appropriations than in the move contemplated, and that the alumni never could be induced therefore, to attend the meetings of their association in any considerable number. He thought that if the meeting would constitute a committee, an unpaid lobby, it would succeed in getting through the Legislature not only the appropriation desired, but the matter of alumni representation. John P. Carr, of Muncie, spoke in a similar strain, and believed that an effort should be made to get, not only appropriations of from $30,000 to $75,000, but an amount sufficient to make a great university of their alma mater. R. A. Ogg, superintendent of schools at Greencastle, talked in favor of the move, and a resolution was finally adopted that the alumni favor action by the legislature permitting them to choose a minority, at least, of the board of trustees. This was followed by a motion that a committee of five be appointed to take charge of the entire matter, with full power to act, and that the committee ask the Legislature for a non-partisan board. This committee was named by the meeting, as follows: Professor Ogg, of Greencastle; D. K. Goss of Lebanon; J. W. Carr, of Muncie, and E. P. Bicknell, of this city. Dr. Jenckes was nominated a member, but declined.

Farm Notes.

Are the fence corners clean? Why not give the old farm a name? Does it not deserve one? Next year's crops often depend on this year's cultivation of the soil. The oat crop is the poorest for years, so don't waste any cornstalks this time.

Never sign a paper for a stranger, no matter how plausible his story is, don't do it. In a majority of cases it will get you into trouble.

Progressive farmers are generally agreed on the superiority of drilling in grain seeds over sowing in broadcast.

For a long time our house has been infested with roaches and we have used Persian powder, borax, alum, soda, concentrated lye and benzine without any apparent benefit. Last week I was crushing cloves and accidentally left a pile of the crushed and fragrant buds on a table near where the roaches always came out, and next day not a roach was seen and this set us to thinking. So we placed crushed cloves all around where the roaches came out with the result that last week
