HANGED.

James E. Stone, the Sextuple Murderer, was hanged at the State Prison at Jeffersonville (Ind.) on Friday morning. The sextuple murderer kept up his bravado until the last. In the language of the Warden, "he tried to the last to bluff God Almighty and everybody else." Stone met his doom without a word of excuse for his crime. His neck was broken by the fall.

The crime for which James E. Stone or Dan Stone was convicted was the atrocious murder of Mrs. Elizabeth Written, her son Denison Written, his wife and three children at Glendale, near East Washington, September 18, 1893. Armed with a corn knife Stone went to the Written home late at night. They were all awake and Denison Written was ill with typhoid fever. Stone knocked and asked younger Mrs. Written for a toothache medicine. As she came to the door he seized her on the head with his right hand. Jumping over the dead body he killed the children as he met them and going to the sick bed of Denison Written dealt him the fatal blow. He killed in the window of the next room and finished the bloody work by killing old Mrs. Written.

Stone confessed the crime to his wife. She was unable to keep the awful secret and told the Grand Jury all.
