Pike Bond Question.

The pike bond case was tried before special judge, Alexander, of Bedford, Monday a week. The suit was brought by the Walker Bros., the treasurer having refused to pay interest due on pike bonds. The defense of the county was that the bonds were to be paid by assessment, and as these assessments had not all been paid, the county could not yet be held responsible; while on the other hand attorneys for the bond holders argued that the county was responsible for all interest due.

Judge Alexander decided that the county is not liable for the payment of the bonds. The question was: can the owner of these bonds hold the county liable; unless the county is liable the complaint is not good. Taking the law as it is, the principle that the county is not liable is not tenable, as nothing is clearer than that it was the intention to make the land benefited by the improvements bear the expense—not that such bonds should be paid by the county. The construction of a pike is not in a strict sense a county matter, but is provided for by a special statute, giving county commissioners power to assess real estate within two miles of the road. Then the loss ought not to fall upon the county, but if the assessment falls short to pay the bonds the commissioners have the power to make additional assessments.
