John Flora's Insanity Was All a Shrewd Bit of Acting.

The Paoli Republican says: "During the trial of John Flora for the murder of Jesse O. Burton, considerable anxiety was felt over the possibility of convicting an insane man. It will be remembered that the only defense set up was that Flora was insane at the time he committed the act, and his attorneys thinking him insane at the time of his recent trial, made an effort to have the case held up and their client committed to the Insane Hospital. We have no doubt but that the attorneys, as well as the witnesses who testified in his behalf, were honest in their belief. Certainly no one who knows Judge Farrell, who was the leading counsel for defendant, will think for a moment that he would take the stand he did unless he was sincere in it. But the jury and the trial Judge, as well as almost every disinterested spectator, thought the insanity of Flora was all a sham, put on for the occasion, in order to create sympathy and escape the punishment provided by law in such cases. But if any doubt remained at the close of the trial it has now been dispelled. After receiving the sentence from the Court and having been taken back to jail, he made it very plain that he had been 'playing it pretty fine'. He then held a long conversation with Lemly Jones, Deputy Sheriff, who had been one of the strong witnesses against him to prove that he was sane. He detailed to Jones the whole transaction, going back to his trouble with Bent Jones, the man he thought he was shooting at when he killed Burton. Then coming up to the recent trial, he discussed that thoroughly saying that of all the witnesses who testified against him only one swore falsely, and it appears that that was on an immaterial point. He told Jones he did not think hard of him or the members of the Sheriff's family who had testified to his sanity, and said that they might easily and truthfully have made their testimony much stronger. He further said that he bore no ill will toward the jury who convicted him. In short he discussed the killing and the trial with a full knowledge of what had been transpiring all the time. Sheriff Jones left with him Saturday night for Michigan City. On the way he also went over the transaction with him, and confessed that he had been 'playing it,' and told Jones just when he began it and how he happened to do it. From what he said it is probable that he was not alone in the work and other guilty parties may yet be made to suffer for their part in the crime of killing Jesse O. Burton."

Judge Martin before whom Flora was first arraigned was confident that he was insane and so expressed himself, as did Dr. Hon of this city who was an expert on the stand during the trial.

Dogs Visit Souders' Slaughter Pen and Do Damage.

During the past few days Souders, the meat man, has been annoyed by dogs invading the slaughter pen, west of town, and killing his sheep. He has been at considerable loss by reasons of the visitation of the canines. Yesterday he had four plump sheep in the pens ready for slaughter today. When the butchers reached the scene this morning they discovered the dogs had preceeded them some few hours and destroyed the remaining sheep. This is the reason Mr. Souders advances today for the absence of mutton at his market. Under the law the township will have to make good Mr. Souders' loss.
