CONVANSING THE VOTE.

The Board of Canvassers met Thursday at 1 o'clock and canvassed the vote of this county on National, State and county candidates. The work was slow and tedious and was not completed until the wee small hours of the morning. The great delay was caused by the discrepancies in the tally sheets and poll books in several precincts made by the carelessness and inefficiency of the election clerks. This incompetency was the cause of several tilts between the attorneys and different members of the Board. It gave an opportunity for dishonest men to get in their work, especially when the vote was close as it was on a few of the local candidates. A disposition was shown Thursday night on the part of some of the Democratic members to deprive the Republican candidate for Sheriff of five votes, to which he was clearly entitled, but there were honest and conscientious Democrats on the Board who would not listen to the proposed infamous proposition, especially after James H. Watson, to his credit be it said, explained the five vote blunder and expressed the opinion that these five votes should be counted for Mr. Davis. The blunder simply consisted in the clerk failing to account for five votes or one "tally" in making up his certificate. These kind of discrepancies were numerous which greatly delayed the canvass. The result shows that four candidates on the Republican ticket are elected, viz: Davis for Sheriff, Munhall for Recorder, Elmore for Assessor, and Peterson for Commissioner. One Democratic elector received a majority of 4, while fourteen Republican electors had a majority of 7. This is accounted for by the fact that a number of Democratic voters stamped the first name on the ticket and no where else. It resulted in giving to Bracken a majority. The Democratic candidates for Governor carried the county by a majority of 3. Altogether the Republicans of Montgomery county did nobly in reducing or practically wiping out the Democratic majority of 220 of two years ago.

No Irishman was ever elected to a county office by the Democracy of old Montgomery. They have been nominated time and again and have been ruthlessly slaughtered at the polls. The Republicans on the contrary have done their whole duty by every Irishman they ever ran for office. Still the rank and file of the Irish voters cling to the Democratic party.

Who Were Elected.

Montgomery county cast her vote for Harrison, that is she gave a majority of 7 for fourteen of the presidential electors. Mr. Pierce, the other Republican elector being defeated by four votes. The reason of this curious condition of affairs is not far to seek. A number of Democrats had intended to vote the straight ticket, but, in spite of all the hammering that had been done, stamped the square opposite the name of Bracken, the first Democratic elector thus voting for that man only. As Mr. Pierce's name was opposed to Bracken's he was defeated four votes in the county, the rest of the Republicans going through by seven. The result as to several of the offices was not determined until last night but the pluralities of the several winning candidates as fixed by the canvassing board are as follows:

Harrison, 7.
Matthews, 3.
Brookshire, 66.
Moffett, 69.
Sellar, 15.
McAllister, 21.
Ader, 20.
Sparks, 131.
Hinton, 103.
Munhall, 7.
Davis, 6.
Bronaugh, 5.
Hunt, 218.
Elmore, 63.
Peterson, 16.
Byers, 60.

Be Careful What You Say.

In speaking of another's faults, Pray, don't forget your own. Remember those in homes of glass. Should seldom throw a stone. If we have nothing else to do But talk of those who sin. 'Tis better we commence at home, And from that point begin.

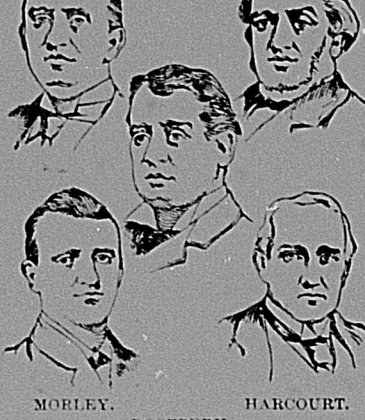

We have no right to judge a man Until he's fairly tried; Should we not like his company? We know the world is wide. Some may have faults, and who has not? The old as well as young; Perhaps we may, for aught we know, Have fifty to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan, And find it works full well— To try my own defects to cure Before of others tell. And though I sometimes hope to be No worse than some I know, My own shortcomings bid me let The faults of others go.

Then let us all, when we commence To slander friend or foe, Think of the harm one word may do To those who hear the tale. Remember, curses sometimes, like Our chickens, "roost at home." Don't speak of others' faults until We have none of our own.

—London Freeman.

The British Cabinet.

AMERICANS are almost as much interested in the new British or Gladstonian cabinet as are Englishmen. The principal members are Earl Roseberry, foreign secretary; Sir William Vernon Harcourt, chancellor of the exchequer; Mr. Herbert H. Asquith, home secretary; the Right Hon. John Morley, chief secretary for Ireland, and Sir Charles Russell, attorney general.

BEHIND THE FOOTLIGHTS.

Walter Hubbell is to star this season in Shakespearean plays.

Jennie Joyce is the reigning concert hall singer in London just now.

It is improbable that Maggie Mitchell will act the coming season.

Lewis Morrison will occasionally during the coming season play "Richelieu."

Patti Rosa's continued ill health necessitates a postponement of the opening of her season.

Jessie Mae Hall will star in "Pocahontas," a new play which was written specially for her.

Maurice Barrymore will read a new play of his to Mrs. Bernard Beere during his stay in London.

Sadie Hasson's new play, "A Kentucky Girl" is from the pen of Fred S. Gibbs, author of "The Voodoo."

There is a whisper about that Joseph Murphy will have "Macduff," which was W. J. Scullin's before he became ill.

"The Cannonball Express" is the title of a sensational comedy drama by Robert J. Donnelly, which will be produced at Philadelphia.

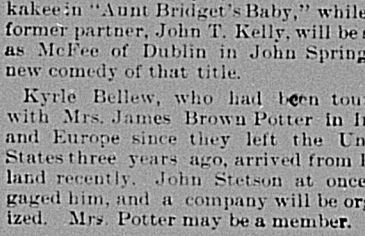

James W. Harkins, Jr., the author of "The White Squadron," has disposed of his interests entirely to A. J. Pearson at a big figure—said to be $15,000.

David Christie Murray, the English novelist, playwright and actor, has signed a contract with Daniel Frohman for a five months' tour of America, beginning at New York in November.

Thomas J. Ryan plays McFee of Kankakee in "Aunt Bridget's Baby," while his former partner, John T. Kelly, will be seen as McFee of Dublin in John Springer's new comedy of that title.

Kyrle Bellow, who had been touring with Mrs. James Brown Potter in India and Europe since they left the United States three years ago, arrived from England recently. John Stetson at once engaged him, and a company will be organized. Mrs. Potter may be a member.

WHERE RATTLESNAKES THRIVE.

A Prospector's Tale of a Trip Through a Gulch in the Madre Chain.

"Talking about snakes," said a grizzled old prospector in Tucson to a party of eastern tourists, "you fellows ought to go down here in the Madre mountains, near the Mexican line, and you'd see snakes. You see, not very many miners and prospectors go in the Madre, because there is almost nothing in our line there, although you do hear stories about wonderful mines, and gold and silver piled up in stacks when the old Mexicans abandoned the diggings, but all the gold there is about it is in the ears of the man who believes such stuff. Besides, if they do go they are most eternally glad to get out again if they have the good luck not to be bitten by the rattlers. Why, the average rattler in the Madre chain is seven or eight feet long, and there are lots of 'em a good deal bigger than that. The stupid little reptiles that go by the name up in Utah and Colorado aren't in it with their Mexican brethren when you get to talking about snakes. I have been there, and you bet I know what I am talking about."

Three years ago Jack McQuade and I were prospecting together, and we got a tip on the quiet that there were some rich finds over near Colquhoun, a little Mexican town about one hundred and seventy-five miles from here. So we went, but didn't get track of anything worth very much, although two or three fellows made their pile. Finally, I left Jack there and came back, and I made up my mind to come through the Madre. The boys told me I hadn't better try it, but I did, and I am not hankering after any more trips of the kind. I had two burros and got along all right, and didn't see anything extraordinary until I had gotten fairly into the range, when one morning I was riding down a ravine that would lead me out at the base of a big peak which I would go around. At the further side there ought to be some of the headwaters of the Maleskyne, as the Indians call a little mountain river that runs out on the plain and loses itself in the sand, and then for the rest of the way it would be all plain sailing. Well, I was riding along down, smoking and leading one of the burros behind, when I noticed two rattlers right in front. I went around them and they raised up and rattled like a basket of eggs. But I didn't mind a little thing like that. Pretty soon I saw some more, and then they seemed, all the rest of the way down, to increase and multiply with the most astonishing rapidity. Luckily the bottom of the gulch was wide enough, so that we got by 'em all right; but if those donks weren't scared! I never saw the stupid little brutes so much alive as they were then, and just as we came to the mouth of the gorge it narrowed up and the snakes were just as thick as ever. There was no other way of getting out, so I hit the donks and we went through like a house afire. At one place we shook a lot of rock loose, and a big bunch of snakes rolled down under the very feet of the burros. I needn't tell you we didn't stop till we got outside, where there was plenty of room.

"Before I could stop the little beasts we nearly ran over a couple of Mexicans, who were almost frightened out of their wits. They must have thought I was a ghost to have come through the Snake gulch, as they called the place, unscathed. But what was the most curious thing about the whole matter was that the Greasers camped right there and caught snakes and fried the oil out for the eastern patent medicine market. It seems there is quite a demand for the oil among a certain class. Their camp was raised up on posts out of the way of snakes. The snakes were caught by means of a steel fork on a long pole, which they used to pin the rattler's head to the ground. The snake was helpless then, and with a small hatchet they cut off its head and hung the body on a stick fastened across the back of a burro. When a donkey load had been killed they were taken to a place where the sun's rays in the afternoon beat down against a wall of rock and made it hot enough to roast eggs. Here they slit the reptile and hung him up on a wooden frame with a pan underneath to catch the slowly dripping oil. A good fat snake would furnish a quart. The stench about the place was something that no words can convey an idea of, but the Greasers didn't seem to mind it much. The rock in the gulch was a shelving, scaly formation, that was full of holes and crannies, and at the mouth was a sort of mountain meadow, ending in a marshy slough, and full of frogs and vermin of every description, and on these the snakes subsisted. The Mexicans had a bonanza there, but I don't want any of it. I went away the next day and never want to go back again."

Heaven in All Countries.

The trite but true aphorism which says that "God made man, and man makes his present and future," is aptly illustrated in the ideas various races have of what the future abode of the blessed will be. Take the Congo's belief for an instance. During his whole life he is pestered to death by mosquitoes and other biting things. This being the case, it is not unreasonable to hear them say that angels spend twenty-four hours out of every day and night catching such pests and pulling their bills off. The natives on Botoques, one of the hottest regions of the globe, believe that Heaven will be a land of cool streams and shaded groves entirely devoid of cactus thorns. All wild desert dwellers die expecting to awake in a wooded land, plentifully supplied with cool, running water. The paradise of the natives of the frozen north is a land of blazing suns and warm fires, overhung with pots of boiling whale's blubber. When the Chinese and Japanese beggars die in the streets it is with a hope that their future may be spent feasting at a round table covered with a yellow cloth.—Boston Globe.

We want every mother to know that croup can be prevented. True croup never appears without a warning. The first symptom is hoarseness, then the child appears to have taken cold or a cold may have accompanied the hoarseness from the start. After that a peculiar rough cough is developed, which is followed by the croup. The time to act is when the child first becomes hoarse; a few doses of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy would prevent the attack. Even after the rough cough has appeared, the disease may be prevented by using this remedy at direct.

The only safe way is to keep a 50 cent bottle of the Remedy in the house for use whenever symptoms of the disease appear. For sale by Nye & Booe, druggists.
