A Government of the South, by the South and for the South appears to be the motto of the Democratic Senators.

MARCH 10, 1875, horse were quoted at $125 to $150, cattle $6, hogs $6.40, wheat $1, corn 60 cents, oats 55 cents, hay $13 to $16 per ton.

C. B. LANDIS is forging to the front as the leading Republican candidate for Congress in the Tenth district. Last Saturday he secured the solid delegation from White county.

The "silver tongue" of the great Kentucky orator, like all other silver, is just now at a fearful discount; and unlike the silver dollar it could not even be "redeemed with gold."

SENATOR SHERMAN'S health is a matter which concerns the whole country. No other man in Washington has the confidence of the people as has Sherman, for it is not bounded by party lines in his case.

CONGRESSMAN MEREDITH of Virginia, when he claimed to know that "thousands" of fraudulent pensioners are on the lists, and on being pressed was able to mention but one case, and that of an apocryphal character, represented very fairly the average assaiant of the pensioners.

ONE of the harsh features of the tariff bill is in connection with the income tax in regard to building and loan associations. This was not in the House bill when it went to the Senate, but the Finance Committee made it as one of the amendments. As the bill now stands the earnings of the widow and the workingman are to be compelled to pay a burdensome tax which the great majority of the well-to-do people of the country will escape. There are no building associations in the South.

THE value of the hay crop in the United States is $400,000,000, which is greater than the cotton crop of the South, but the Democrats who have framed the tariff bill placed a duty on steel ties to be used in baling hay, whereas when the same kind of steel ties are to be used in baling cotton they are to be admitted free. Why this discrimination against the Northern farmer who raises hay and in favor of the Southern planter who raises cotton? Mr. Brookshire voted for this bill with these inconsistent and sectional features. Can he explain why?

MR. CLEVELAND has declared his intention not to select a public printer from any large city, but to take some man from the country who is not mixed up with labor organizations. How would it do for him to come to Crawfordsville? There's our friend Luse, of the Review, who could draw his salary with charming regularity. If he is not up to the Clevelandonian standard perhaps Brookshire could be induced to recommend our friend Keeney, of the Star. The powerful influence of Walter Hulet, too, could be invoked in his behalf and thus at one stroke, to use the language of the distinguished Secretary of State, a "great wrong could be righted."

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN L. WILSON, of Washington, has prepared a resolution for introduction in the House calling on the Treasury Department for information in regard to a contract entered into with a British coal company in Vancouver for a supply of coal to American vessels patrolling the Behring Sea. Mr. Wilson says information cannot be obtained at the Treasury Department in regard to the matter. He thinks that it is peculiarly severe on American interests that the British Canadian pirates, so to speak, should be allowed to destroy our seal fisheries and deprive the government of the large revenue that was received from that source, and that then our own government should go to these very people and buy $100,000 worth of coal for the use of our vessels engaged in protecting the seal, when coal could just as well be obtained in Washington only a short distance away from the mines on the British side which have obtained the contract. Mr. Wilson proposes to get the information if possible and let the country know the facts in an official manner.

CHAPTER IX—Continued.

After a time the girl began to listen eagerly to what was said.
"What time was Gibbon to be here?" It's past it now, ain't it?" asked one of the men.
"Not later than nine o'clock," replied another. "He ought to be here by now."

"It's always late," growled a third.
"Ah, and he takes precious good care to be out of the way when the fun begins, too," said one, when Mary recognized as Jack Dilworth, the man who had attacked Tom. "He kept out of the way to her night when we tried to square accounts with that young blackleg, Tom Roylance."

"Black-and-blue-leg, you should say, Jack," said another, laughing at the reference to the other's injury.

"Aye, curse the young devil," growled the man, angrily and fiercely, in reply. "I'll make him sorry he ever met me that night. See if I don't."

"Shut up, Jack; what do you want making such a devil of a row for? We've got something more to talk about than a touch of the calf of your leg."

"H—sh!" cried a man, warningly, who was standing outside. "I can hear some one coming. H—sh!"

There was silence among them in an instant, and Mary heard some one go past, whistling as he went. It seemed to her that he was hurrying.

She deliberated a moment whether she should call for help; but consideration showed her that such a course would be foolish.

The next minute she was more than glad she had kept silent.
"Here comes Gibbon," cried the man who was looking out.

"Are you there, lads?" asked the newcomer. "Did you see him?"

"Which?" cried one or two together.

"Why, that knobstick, Tom Roylance. That was him just went by. I've been dogging him."

"Why the devil didn't you knock him in the head?" burst from Jack Dilworth. "Or call me to do it, if you were afraid."

"Because there's a worse business in store for him than a cracked skull, Jack, as you yourself 'll see, before this job's over," answered Gibbon Frawley, with an oath.

"What's that?" asked the other eagerly.

"What do you say if we put the whole job on to his shoulders?"

"That 'd be a good un," cried one or two with a laugh. "But you couldn't do it, could you?"

"Couldn't I? Well, wait a bit and see. But now, what about things?" In the first place, I've got news for you, and nice news it is, too."

"What is it?" cried some one when he stopped.

"Why, that a lot of cowards mean going back to work in a day or two, and that they've been to Goring and sold us. It's all through those hands who wouldn't come out when they ought to have done, and that Roylance is at the bottom of it all."

"Carry him," said one or two, sniting the action to the word.

"Don't be in a hurry to send him to hell," said Gibbon, with an ugly laugh. "There'll be a little bit of bother with keeping him on earth for a bit longer yet. I know a thing or two. You leave him, and if he don't get more than paid out in full, my name's not Gibbon."

"Serve the bound right," said the others.

"But now, to business," said Gibbon. "As for the same mind and determined to deal out justice to the man who has treated us in this way?"

"Yes, of course we are, mate," said one of the men, impatiently. "What else are we here for?"

"Good," said Gibbon. "Have you thought any more about how you mean to do what's wanted to be done, Jos?" he asked, turning to one of the men, whose name was Jos Hamer.

"Aye, lad, that'll be all right. You give me ten minutes, or at the outside fifteen, in the engine room, and I'll bet my last tanner that there won't be no work inside the place for a month—or six months, for that matter. All you've got to do is get me inside, and then leave me to do the rest."

"Well, manage that. Young Ben Druee was to have watched to-night; but he's off, and so old Ben takes his place, and you know what sort he is for his beer. He's been guzzling all the afternoon, with Tom Carter here, and he's tight now, isn't he, Tom?"

"Aye, lad, that he is," said the man addressed, with a laugh at his own cunning. "He's more'n tight—he's downright boozed, and as muddled-headed as a fool."

"You can get Jos inside, can't you, Tom, without his being seen by old Ben?"

"Ben wouldn't see an army to-night," replied the man. "I'll get him in right enough, and go and talk to Ben all the time he's there. Stand him another pint, maybe. Start him on the booze and he's like a train going down grade with the brake busted."

"Then our part will be to keep a sharp look out all round to see that no one comes in the way," said Gibbon. "You've got the key that you want, Tom?"

"What, on me?" answered Tom Carter. "Not me. Tain't very likely as I'm going to walk about with such an ugly bit of evidence as that in my pocket. What do you take me for? But it's all right."

"Where is it, then?"

"Why, here, to be sure; along with Jos' tools. But it isn't good enough to walk about with things like them, is it?"

"All right. I only meant to make sure that everything was in order. It's a bit too early to start yet. You're sure you can do what has to be done in the time you say, Jos?"

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health.

"Sure, of course I am. Do you think I'm a fool?"

"What are you going to do?" asked Jack Dilworth, in a surly voice.

"Never you mind. What I'm going to do won't take no lives and won't break no limbs. And if Tom Carter here manages the job properly, so as I can get in and out again without leaving any traces, and if you chaps keep a sharp look out, and save us from any awkward little interruptions, we shall be all snug away home and in bed before anything happens. And when it do happen—well," he added, with a sniff and a short dry laugh of self-satisfaction, "the whole blooming machinery won't be worth an old mule frame. That's all."

Walker Sale

The End Has Come—The Curtain Is Down

On the last act of the last scene in the eventful merchandising career of the Great Wholesale Dry Goods House,

The James H. Walker Co.

The superb $650,000 stock is all sold—sold under the auctioneer's merciless hammer. And such a sale—a sale that attracted the attention of the entire dry goods trade of the Nation. The leading merchants of all the great cities had corps of buyers attending it. 'Tis quite true that many goods brought big prices, but none of them found their way to—

THE BIG STORE

They could not because of the measures we used to prevent bad buying, namely: We spent several days at the big Walker warehouse prior to the sale, examining and scrutinizing each and every piece—every lot in the whole stock—and marking down low bargain prices on catalogues furnished us for that purpose. Then we paid close attention to the bidding and never allowed one lot to be knocked down to any one else if at or below our guiding prices, but when they went above we promptly let them go to any one who chose to pay more for them—in short it was a cool, premeditated scheme to Capture the Bargains from the Great Walker Sale for our customers.

As a result we will commence to-morrow a Grand Sale. We say "Sale" but the word hardly expresses the event. It will be practically a reckless distribution of Walker's Silks, Walker's Dress Goods, Walker's Linens, Walker's Notions, Walker's Domestics,
