FELL WITH A CRASH.

Collapse of a Water Tower at Peoria, Ill.

A YOUNG BOY'S LIFE CRUSHED OUT.

A Number of Others Are Injured, Some Fatally. The Structure—Freely-Watered Towers Sweep Away Several Buildings.

DISASTER AT PEORIA.
PEORIA, Ill., March 31.—One killed, fifteen injured, and destruction of $40,000 worth of property is the terrible sequence of the collapse of the west bluff tower of the Peoria Water company, located at the corner of South Boulevard and College streets. It was at 10:20 Friday morning that the accident happened and its exact manner is perfectly inexplicable.

How the Disaster Occurred.
The standpipe was 120 feet high and 20 feet in diameter, built of steel plate three-quarters of an inch thick, and was supplied from a 30,000-gallon reservoir 3 miles back on the bluff, giving it a tremendous pressure. The recent cold snap and subsequent thaw had sprung some of the joints and workmen were engaged in repairing them during the morning. A number of schoolboys were watching the operation when, without any warning, the great steel plates suddenly burst asunder with a frightful roar of escaping water. The workmen were swept away on the awful flood.

Boy Killed by a Falling Plate.
The report of the falling structure was heard for blocks away, and within an incredibly short time the neighborhood was thronged with an excited crowd bent on rendering aid to the many who had been killed or injured. Poor Frank Hagan, a son of Barney Hagan, for many years a member of the paid fire department, was the only one to suffer death outright. He was 14 years of age, and with a number of companions, all school boys about his own age, was engaged in playing baseball within a few feet of the base of the tower. One of the large plates, hurled with terrific force, caught him and plunked him to the ground. It was fully half an hour before his body was dug out and removed to his home, less than a block away.

Fatally Hurt.
All his companions were injured, but their escape from instant death is little short of miraculous. Frank Caldwell was thrown clear across the street and under a house. One of his legs was broken in four places and will certainly have to come off. As he is injured internally it is not thought there is a possibility of his recovery.

Rollo King, a son of Norman S. King, an insurance agent, was terribly injured about the head and face. Charles Littlefield was badly injured about the head. Howard Anderson, a son of Charles Anderson, had a shoulder broken and was otherwise badly cut and bruised. Clyde Powell, a son of John Powell, had a leg broken. Charles Needham was quite badly cut, but fortunately he had no bones broken. Frank Gaddon, who was riding past on a bicycle, had a very narrow escape. He was blown through a barbed-wire fence and was terribly cut and bruised. His machine was badly wrecked.

Employees Badly Injured.
The employees of the company who were at work on the tower were all badly hurt. W. D. Norris has a big cut in his right temple and sustained internal injuries. He was unconscious for a number of hours before his removal to his home on Green street, and it is feared that his injuries will result fatally. John Huber was injured internally. It was several hours before he could be removed. He was then taken to St. Francis' hospital, and though he is getting along well it is impossible to state the result of his wounds. Alfred Gross was injured severely internally. William Kennedy was plugging a pipe at the time the crash came. He is a boiler-maker. His greatest injuries are about the chest. He has more than twenty cuts on all portions of the body, and his chances of recovery are considered remarkably slight.

Houses Wrecked.
Many persons residing in the immediate vicinity were badly hurt. J. B. Trapp's house, which stood just south of the tower, is a total wreck. His wife was in the yard at the time and was badly hurt by being blown against the house of Mr. Isom, next door. A baby asleep in the house escaped injury. Mr. Isom's house was badly wrecked and his daughter Hazel was severely injured. Across the street from the tower Mrs. William McGrath heard the crash and hastened to a bedroom to rescue her niece. The water forced a door from its hinges, striking her with terrific force on the head. She was badly hurt. The house was carried fully 10 feet from its foundations and is nearly a wreck. All the furniture is destroyed. The house next north, also owned by Mr. Grath and occupied by William Stewart, was moved from the foundation and badly wrecked.

Jesse Norman, a teamster, resides directly east of the tower. His barn was swept away and demolished and his house removed from its foundation. His daughter Bertha, aged 8, was carried 100 feet and badly injured about the head. Barns, outbuildings and other small structures throughout the neighborhood were carried away and destroyed.

Cause of the Accident Unknown.
Mr. Dabney H. Maurey, Jr., the representative of the company, is unable to explain the accident. He considers it the result of the ice which formed during the winter. The tower was built to withstand a pressure of 300 pounds to the square inch at the base and there was only a pressure of a little over forty-pounds when the break came.

SLAIN IN A RIOT.

Whisky Police and a Mob Fight in South Carolina.

FOUR MEN ARE INSTANTLY KILLED.

The Constables Flee to the Woods, Are Pursued, and It Is Reported Many Were Slain—Militia Refuses to Take a Hand.

CARNAGE DOWN SOUTH.
COLUMBIA, S. C., March 31.—The passions aroused by the dispensary law and the system had the long expected result in a fight at Darlington Friday afternoon, in which at least two spies and two citizens were shot to death and three men were badly wounded. Twenty-one other spies took to the swamps and the latest report is that they have all been killed.

In the fight at Darlington Frank E. Norment, a prominent young insurance man, and a man named Redmond from North Carolina and Constables McLennan and Pepper were killed outright. Chief of Police Dargan, K. D. Lucas and Louis Norment were shot and dangerously wounded.

Cause of the Trouble.
The trouble grew out of an attempt to search private houses for liquor. The citizens protested against this and the spies yielded in the face of the excitement and agreed not to search private premises. They also promised to leave Darlington, although the force, seventeen in number, had been reinforced to thirty-seven. They had gone to the depot to proceed to Columbia. There were few men on the streets, but they had acquired rifles and smooth bore and looked determined. The constables passed along quietly and no move was made to attack them. As the Columbia train pulled out and was passing through the outskirts of the city a volley was fired into the car containing the police, but the train was pulled out rapidly and the men escaped unhurt and none of the passengers were injured. A small portion hearing that the force had been divided moved rapidly to the Northeastern station. When they arrived they began to jeer the spies and the latter massed and drew their pistols.

The Battle Begins.
In a few seconds the collision came. Pepper, it is alleged, fired first, and Norment, a prominent citizen and merchant, dropped dead. It was then a battle and the firing became indiscriminate. Citizens and spies fell. Redmond on the one side killed by the second fire, while at the first discharge from the citizens' rifles Pepper and McLennan went down. L. M. Norment and Chief of Police Dargan are among those badly wounded. The firing attracted attention and citizens came running from every direction.

Fled to the Woods.
The spies seeing they were wiped out started to flee to the woods and were joined by Chief Gaillard, who had left his train to take command. The people were thoroughly aroused and many farmers followed and joined in the chase. As a result the sixteen spies have been driven into the woods, and the people have the whole country picketed. If the report of their fleeing is not true and the spies are run down there will be a pitched battle and they will be exterminated.

Great Excitement.
The Darlington guards are under arms, endeavoring to preserve the peace, but the trouble has outgrown their control. Sheriff Scarborough is powerless and is under the necessity of being aided by the citizens if he interferes. One of the wounded constables is in Darlington jail, protected by the local military company. There is great excitement all over the state, and the inability to procure liquor at this juncture is a good thing for the public peace.

The Militia Revolts.
CHARLESTON, S. C., March 31.—At 8 p. m. Gov. Tillman ordered Col. Jones, of the Palmetto regiment, to proceed to Darlington with the troops. One of the militia companies, commanded by Capt. John G. Capers, assembled at their armory. The captain offered to go or not, as the majority elected. The roll was called and each man as his name was called laid down his gun. Then the captain did the same thing with his sword. When the news reached the streets there was wild cheering. Capt. Alston, of the Richland volunteers, found it impossible to get his men together. Only six responded to the call. The governor's guards debated the question an hour, the crowd waving on the street below meantime becoming impatient. There were made that if they attempted to march the crowd would attack them and capture their arms. The guards finally decided to disband in preference to going to Darlington.

Poured Out the Liquors.
FLORENCE, S. C., March 31.—A mob entered the state dispensary here at 8:05 a. m. and destroyed all the liquors. The members of the mob had many rifles in their possession. They were fired upon by the spies and had threatened to make trouble here all night.

Women Claim the Right to Vote.

HE DENIES MUCH.

Col. Breckinridge Spends Another Day on the Witness Stand.

THE MAIN POINTS IN HIS EVIDENCE.

Much of His Story Unfit for Publication—He Swears That He Never Promised to Make Miss Pollard His Wife.

HIS STORY CONTINUED.
WASHINGTON, March 31.—Congressman Breckinridge continued his testimony, telling an entirely different story than was told by Madeline Pollard of their nine years of illicit relationship.

Col. Breckinridge said that the day after the buggy ride incident, he took a train for Lexington and found the plaintiff there, not by any prearrangement with him, however. A conversation resulted in an arrangement to meet at Sarah Goss' house in Lexington. The place of meeting was suggested by Miss Pollard, who said she had visited there with Rhodes. The meeting at the Goss residence took place and witness said he remained with the plaintiff until about 10:30, and she elected to spend the night. There was no question of going to a more respectable place. There were no protestations of love or affection on his part, said Col. Breckinridge, and no talk with the plaintiff about helping her to secure an education. She appeared to be a woman fully grown and matured and understood matters pertaining to the sexes that a young girl would not know. The witness paid her expenses and gave her sufficient money to get back to Cincinnati.

Col. Breckinridge told of several other meetings with the plaintiff. He denied the statement made by the plaintiff on the witness stand that she went to Washington to reside because of his importunities. On the contrary, he said, he did all he could to prevent her going to the capital. "There was no assumption of relations with the plaintiff until July, 1887. He told of her sending to him for money frequently, and said he always gave her whatever amount she asked for, believing her story that it was used for the purpose of defraying medical expenses. The witness had never told him that she had given birth to a living child. Mr. Butterworth then said to the witness:

Did Not Promise Marriage.
"The plaintiff has said that on two occasions, after protestations of love, you said you would marry her if it was possible."

"There is not a scintilla of truth in that statement—not a shred. Under no circumstances, at no time, was there such a statement. The plaintiff never alluded to the possibility of it. Before the death of my wife there was not a solitary word that could be distorted into such a thing."

Breckinridge denied all knowledge of the correspondence to Rhodes, alleged to have been written, dated from New Orleans and other places in the south, by Miss Pollard under his direction; nor had he ever written a letter purporting to be from her to her mother or any other person.

Col. Breckinridge was on the stand all the afternoon, and denied everything. At a point in his testimony where he was detailing conversation between himself and Mr. Rhodes about the latter marrying Miss Pollard, he declared that Mr. Rhodes said there was something improper which made it necessary for him (Rhodes) to marry her. Col. Breckinridge said that he told the plaintiff frequently that she was bound in gratitude and by a nearer tie to marry Rhodes.

Madeline Protested.
Much of his former statement was repeated by the defendant, and before he had finished Miss Pollard broke forth, sobbing, and exclaimed: "That is not true. Why do you tell the truth about something?"

Judge Bradley admonished her: "If you can't control yourself you will have to leave the room."

No attention was paid by Col. Breckinridge to this interruption, but he continued: "I told her in the spring of 1883 that after what Rhodes told me of the relations between them it would be impossible that any other relations could ever exist between us."

At the Hoffman house, New York, September 20, 1892, the plaintiff said she had an opportunity to go abroad and study if he (the witness) would represent that she was engaged to be married to him in two years. The witness said he told her that he was not open to negotiations of that sort; that under no circumstances would he consent to any representation of an engagement. This was the first time the question of marriage had been broached by her.

The Talk with Mrs. Blackburn.
Referring to his interview with Mrs. Blackburn regarding the scandal against Miss Pollard he said it differed from Mrs. Blackburn's version. In March, 1893, the plaintiff had told him that she had been obliged, under Mrs. Blackburn's cross-examination, to represent that she was engaged to him. He told her that he would go right back and say to Mrs. Blackburn that it was not true, but under her importunities promised to keep his mouth shut if she would leave the city.

Put Himself in Her Power.
Returning to Washington March 31, he had received a call from Miss Pollard before breakfast. He said:

"I agreed then that if she would go away I would put myself in the power of the plaintiff and Mrs. Blackburn and pretend there was an engagement. I said: 'You have put me where there is no alternative but to put myself in your power and trust you to submit to a scene in the hotel office or street, perhaps have an attempt made on my life on the street.' I said that there must be no misunderstanding between us. I reminded her that from the first I had said there could be no marriage, but anything short of that which I could do to save those who loved me I would do; that she could not trust me, because, knowing the relations I had had with her while I was such a happy family, she would always suspect me."

Witness said to Mrs. Blackburn in an interview some days later that she had been extremely kind and that so long as the plaintiff had her as a friend she needed nothing else, but in her distress he had offered the protection of his name, and that, with Mrs. Blackburn's friendship and the protection of his name, the plaintiff could well afford to despise what Mrs. Fillette might do, and that he was grateful to Mrs. Blackburn for what she had done.

Tells About That Pistol.
After speaking of visiting Philadelphia as the guest of George W. Childs, the secret marriage to Mrs. Wing in New York was skipped, and Col. Breckinridge went on to tell of his meeting with Miss Pollard at the Hoffman house May 1. He was surprised on entering his room to find the door of the adjoining room open, and walking in found Miss Pollard there and but partly dressed. She was excited, and in the course of an angry interview drew a pistol and threatened to shoot him. He closed the door between them, and threatened to have her locked up in the tombs. Under this threat she finally gave up the weapon.

Col. Breckinridge then related the circumstances attending the visit to Maj. Moore, the chief of police, giving the following narrative:

"I and my wife (Mrs. Wing) were in the dining room of the house when the plaintiff walked in and saw me. Mrs. Wing, I want to see Mr. Breckinridge alone on a matter of great importance. I turned to my wife and said that I thought I had better go with her. As I walked out by Lafayette park she said: 'I intend to end this matter. I intend to kill you. I said: 'All right' and she went on. 'Mr. Breckinridge, this is your last chance.' The statement that I said anything derogatory to my wife is an absolute fabrication, without a shadow of truth on which to hang. As I walked out by Lafayette park she said she intended to end this thing by killing me, and as we walked along she said it would be a good thing to end it by that kind of a scandal and she was going to kill herself too. She did most of the talking. There had been no effort on my part to calm her fears, no protestations of love, nothing about her being a nervous, excitable child."

"When we got to Maj. Moore's office I asked (he was in and being told he was, I went in and the plaintiff followed me. I said to Maj. Moore: 'I need the protection of the law. This lady threatens to kill me. I will tell you how I came to be in this position and I want you to put her or me under arrest.'"

"He said he hoped it was not as bad as that. He went over to her and she held up her hands and said: 'I have no weapon but these,' and then I said to Maj. Moore that I wanted to relate all the circumstances so that he might decide whether to arrest her or me. Then she broke out into a flood of hysterical tears and said: 'Oh, don't tell him; is it necessary?' I said I intended to tell him everything, when she put her hand on my shoulder and begged me not to tell him. I took her hand off and turned to her and said: 'Will you do exactly what I demand if I do not tell him?' She said she would, and I turned to Maj. Moore and said: 'I think we can settle this ourselves.'"

Another Attempt to Shoot Him.
After leaving the office with Miss Pollard he had told her that there could be no more terms between them, that she would have to look to some one else for support, and that he did not intend to give her another dollar. They had talked together of the child that was to be born. Then the witness told of Miss Pollard's last attempt to shoot him. He had been to see her at the house of Mrs. Thomas in Lafayette square a few days after the scene in the office of the chief of police. He had suspected her intentions, and as he stepped into the room he threw both arms around her, clasping her tightly around the shoulders, slipped his arms down until he could grasp her hands and caught the weapon. This episode the colonel narrated graphically, stopping to remark, jocosely: "And I have the pistol in my possession now; one of the mementoes of my engagement to marry the plaintiff."

When he loosened his arms, he continued, she had fainted, or pretended to faint, so he laid her on the divan, put the pistol in his pocket, closed the door and walked out.

This seemed a good climax to end the chapter, and so court adjourned until Monday.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.
A Page From Her History.
The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but, obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure. I said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I felt a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost purified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 609 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.
