REPUBLICAN CITY TICKET.

FOR MAYOR,
FRED C. BANDEL.
FOR TREASURER,
WILLIAM E. NICHOLSON.
FOR CLERK,
JOSEPH D. TRACY.
FOR MARSHAL,
JAMES P. GRIMES.
FOR COUNCILMEN.

First Ward—JOHN F. WILHITE.
Second Ward—GEORGE E. ROBINSON.
Third Ward—WM. N. MCAMPBELL.

The city health authorities should spare no pains in forcing citizens to clean up. A few vigorous prosecutions would have a wholesome effect.

JIM ELMORE's campaign in Ripley township seems to have subsided. Jim can be depended upon to bob up later, however, like a fly in the ointment.

It is interesting to note that the second Democratic house after that of "Czar" Reed, vindicated the much abused rules of Mr. Reed by adopting them.

There are many reasons why a Democrat should vote the Republican ticket, but not one single reason can be given why a Republican should vote the Democratic ticket.

GEN. HENRY W. SLOCUM, one of the conspicuous figures of the war, died at his home in Brooklyn last Saturday. Thus one by one the heroes of our civil war are passing away.

The city is crowded with delegates to two large religious conventions—Presbyterian and Christian. Crawfordsville is a model convention town for all religious, educational or literary bodies.

CRAWFORDSVILLE should buy the water works or encourage the formation of a new water company by granting a good franchise. It has been conclusively demonstrated that Crawfordsville and the Stanton-Coffin syndicate cannot agree.

VORY BROOKSHIRE absented himself from Congress yesterday to avoid voting for an endorsement of "Czar" Reed's famous rules. Vory abused Reed too harshly all over this district to have the nerve to vote him an endorsement now. Vory favored the adoption of the rules just the same.

Some Republicans suspect a still hunt on the part of the Democratic city candidates. Forewarned is forearmed. Every Republican can do a part toward preventing the success of a still hunt by casting a straight ticket in the ballot box early on the morning of Tuesday, May 1.

BEN SWANK, the oracle of Bristle Ridge, has but little faith in the success of the county Democracy this fall. When asked if Coal Creek had any Democratic candidates he replied: "If they air any they air dash damned greenies. I ain't heerd of any pantin' like lizards on a rail for nominations. They know too much out in old Coal Creek."

Two significant facts, stated by Senator Hale, of Maine, in his speech in the Senate a few days ago, show most conclusively why the South should not be allowed to impose free trade on this country:

1. New York alone, has more manufacturers than the entire 15 Southern States.

2. Of the entire amount of wages paid, the South contributes but one-eighth.

There are several open drains in very prominent places about town which smell to heaven. As the weather gets warmer, they smell the louder. Besides being extremely offensive to the nostrils of pedestrians they are dangerous to the public health and particularly the health of those responsible for them. They are a positive violation of law and our Mayor should suppress them.

The Republicans of Crawfordsville seldom have a better ticket to vote for than the one nominated by our city primary election. The nominees are all well known, honorable and representative citizens and deserve, not only the nominal support, but the hearty, enthusiastic support of the entire party. If any Democrat is elected it will be by Republican votes. The Democratic candidates know this and those who take enough interest to make a canvass confine their attentions almost exclusively to Republican voters. Their efforts should be unfruitful. This is no year for Republicans to vote for Democrats. The truth is the entire Republican ticket is going to be elected and no Republican should dim the glory of the victory by decreasing the majorities.

CHAPTER XIX.

TWIXT LOVE AND DOUBT.
Her heart beating high with strangely mingled emotions, Mary tore the envelope open.

"Dear Mary—I am very miserable. I have broken my promise to you about stopping to face out the trouble; but that is not the worst. I wish now with all my heart that I had taken your advice, but there—I cannot tell you all that has happened. Some day I will. I am going away either to America or Australia. I cannot stay in the country after what has happened; but I must see you for I can before I go. Can you forgive me enough to come and meet me? I am here in Manchester, living at 19 Bolton street. Will you come and meet me, if only for the last time before I go? I am utterly wretched. I want to know that you can forgive me, and I want to hear it from your own lips. Then I can go across the sea with a lighter heart. Come Tuesday. I'll meet all the chief trains that you can come by at Exchange station. Do come."

"Across the sea!" That was the sentence which at first held her, and the thought of it stabbed the poor girl to the heart. She sat for a minute or two perfectly still in dumb misery. "Across the sea!"—he to ill out his life in one world; she to live in another—a life of work, hopeless, wearying, void of love.

After a time she read the letter again, and the second reading was not so fruitful of emotion. Her reasoning faculties were less deadened by her feelings; and she was surprised that Tom did not refer to what had happened at the mill; nor did he give the cause of his having left Walkden Bridge.

With this thought uppermost, she read it again, and found that although there were one or two vague sentences which might or might not be taken to refer to the tragedy at the mill, they were not such as he would have written.

"I cannot tell you all that has happened. . . . I wish now with all my heart I had taken your advice. . . . I cannot stay in the country after what has happened." These sentences were just what anyone might have written who was referring to some other reason for leaving the town, and not to the tragedy.

What was it, then, that he could not tell?

That Tom would not stay in the country when he felt that he had been branded as a suspected thief, was a natural enough decision for him to make; but what if the letter did mean that he had heard the news and was going away in consequence? How was it possible that he had not heard?

All of the evening papers on Saturday had been full of it; the morning papers that day had had long reports; the very fact of the murder having taken place in such a spot as a mill was enough to make everyone in Lancashire talk about it.

She could get to no solution, except that she would go and see him the very first thing next day. She took out paper and began a letter to tell him so. But she did not finish it, as she reflected that now it might not be safe to write to him by name. Then she destroyed the letter.

She was tearing it up when some one came to the cottage and knocked. It was Reuben Gorringe, and as soon as he entered the door Mary saw by the expression on his face that he had important news.

"You have news?" she said, glancing at him somewhat nervously.

"Savannah is back," he said.

"I know. I have seen her," answered Mary.

"You know that she has not seen Tom, then?" he asked.

"Yes. I am glad of it," replied the girl.

"Glad?" echoed Gorringe.

"Very glad," said Mary, confidently.

"Do you know what it means?"

"Yes. It means that Tom has been wronged in regard to her."

"Why did he run away if not with her?" asked Gorringe, sharply, looking at her as he delivered the thrust.

"Because Mr. Coode and you told him to go if he wished to avoid proceeding against him on the other matter. You drove him to go away," she answered, readily.

"You believe, then, that his only object in going away was this desire to avoid the consequences which Mr. Coode mentioned?" he asked, after a pause.

"Something that seems to give the motive for that deed at the mill," he answered.

"Against whom does it point?" she asked, almost breathlessly, her eyes wide open in apprehension.

"Against Tom Royleyance."

"What is it?" she asked, brave but pale, and facing the man.

"Something was taken away which concerned no one but Tom," he said.

"I have no reason to believe anything else."

"My poor lass," he said, sighing as he spoke.

The girl looked up questioningly and anxiously.

"Yes," he said in answer to her look.

"I have news, bad news. 'Tis hard on me to have to be the bearer of bad news to you; it will turn you against me, Mary."

"Nay! I would never turn against anyone for the sake of the truth," answered the girl.

"Something that seems to give the motive for that deed at the mill," he answered.

"Something was taken away which concerned no one but Tom," he said.

"What papers were they?" she asked after awhile, her voice hoarse and low, and her lips quivering.

"They were the papers which proved the case," answered Gorringe. "There were the accounts, on separate sheets, the receipts given by Tom for the money he had had, and the receipts he had taken from others for what he had paid. The former included those for which no account was ever given in by him."
