THE ECONOMY OF HIGH WAGES.

The Social Economist's leader on "The Economy of High Wages" shows that the recent efforts of Atkinson and Schoenhof, as representative free traders, to adopt as if it were their own, the doctrine that high wages are consistent with the general prosperity of those who pay them, does not indicate their honest and candid conversion to the high-wage idea as it is advocated by the truly American school of economists. It is merely a tactical use of the "high-wage" pretense to cover a low-wage policy. It is the ass under the lion's skin. Mr. Guntton, who was the first economist to advocate high-wage doctrine, points out that high wages stand associated with cheaper products only where man is working in association with a larger proportion of the forces of nature than the competitors whom he undersells. These nature forces are commanded by machine power and modern invention. It is because protection increases machine power, which requires high-wage workers, that it is possible for high wages to save more money to employers than low wages. But if low-wage workers work the same machinery and turn out the same product in the same time as the high-wage workers, the latter cannot avoid being displaced. In the form in which Atkinson and Schoenhof take up the argument, that high wages per se directly and immediately increase the product and reduce cost, it is a paradox which shows its inconsistency on its face. To the inexperienced eye, paste outlines the diamond, so these free-traders will seem to some to have discovered the secret of high wages.

An income tax under ordinary conditions is without precedent in the United States. The federal government was started without this odious tax; the war of 1812 and the Mexican war were fought without it; we bought Louisiana and the Floridas without it, and the national treasury has repeatedly weathered financial panics without it. A protective tariff mainly has supplied the needs of the federal government. Only for a short interval during and subsequent to the war period was an income tax levied, and then because other sources of revenue were practically exhausted. An income tax is now proposed in anticipation of a deficit caused by an unpatriotic policy designed to dismantle American industries. It is an attempt to force on the American people an alien tax in behalf of an alien tariff. The conspiracy will prove as abortive as it will disastrous, for the act that paralyzes American industries will wipe out hundreds of thousands of American incomes, great and small.

The candidates on the Democratic city ticket are making an apologetic campaign. They are not in sympathy with their party in Congress so they say, O. no. But should one of them be elected it would be heralded all over the country as rapidly as lightning could carry it that the present Congress with all of its incompetency and blunders had been endorsed by a Republican city including not only the destructive industrial policy but the malicious attacks that have been made on the pensioners. The way to rebuke the Democratic party with all of its incompetency is to begin at the bottom with this up with the county, district and State tickets and give rousing Republican majorities all along the line. If the men composing the Democratic ticket are not in sympathy with their party in Congress let them show their sincerity by voting the Republican ticket themselves.

The order of Odd Fellows was established in the United States seventy-five years ago on the coming 26th of April, in the city of Baltimore. As the order now numbers 700,000 they have good reason to honor the anniversary on the 26th.

If every man, woman and child in this locality would make a resolve that not a dollar of their money should be spent outside of the community henceforth an era of prosperity would immediately set in.

THE OLD MILL MYSTERY.

By Arthur W. Marchmont, B. A.

"You're a good lass, Mary—a good lass," he said. "I've been wronging the lad—and such a lad as he has always been, too. Poor lad! Poor Tom! I suppose they have taken him up, haven't they?"

"Yes," answered Mary, glad that she had not had the task of breaking the news. "They charge him, but they've got to make good their words, and that's a very different thing. Then, you haven't told anyone about his coming here late on Friday night?"

"No, lass, not a soul. I was too skeered to say a word about it. For he was awful wild and strange-like," he said.

"By the way, did you see whether he brought anything in with him when he came?" asked Mary, the thought of her discovery in the parlor returning to her.

"I don't know that he had. I rather think he hadn't, but I can't rightly say. Have you seen Savannah? The lass hasn't been in for a week or more and I miss her sorely."

"She's been away; went Friday, and only came back yesterday. I saw her last night."

"I wish she'd come in for a bit. Tell her, if you see her, it's lonesome lying here by oneself, now, without the lad's home coming to look forward to," said the old man, with a sigh.

"I'll come back myself as soon as I can," said Mary, touched by the words. "But I must go home for awhile."

Close by her cottage she met Gibeon Pawle.

Since the time of the explosion he had remained in the village, but had avoided Mary. Now, contrary to his custom, he crossed the street and came up to her.

"This'll trouble you, Mary, I've heard the news," he said, without any other greeting. "I'm sorry."

"What news do you mean, Gibeon?" she asked, as if in ignorance of his meaning.

"About Tom," replied the other. "I should like to help you if you'll let me."

"I want no help of yours. I have not yet forgotten what I heard that night," replied Mary, looking meaningfully at him.

"You mean you'll have no dealings with me, because I had a hand in the plant?"

"I don't trust you, Gibeon; and I want no help from them I can't trust."

"Well, you can do as you like, with your beastly pride," he answered, somewhat angrily. "And if you hadn't saved my life you might go to the deuce. But I'm not so bad as you seem inclined to think, and I might be able to do you a good turn over this job."

"I don't want your help, I tell you," repeated the girl. "I don't want anybody's help. And you couldn't help me if I did."

"You don't know that, Mary," said the man.

"I know that I wouldn't have your help, even if I did want it; and with that she walked on."

At the cottage she found a note from Reuben Gorrings.

"This is terrible news. I had better see you at once. Either come to me at the mill or let me know of your return that I may come to you."

Mary went up at once to the mill, and not finding the manager there left word that she had been seeking him. She had been at home some little time, and had made a meal—the first she had had that day—before Gorrings came.

He took the hand she held, and kept it a long time, as if in friendly sympathy, while he looked pityingly into her face.

"You are suffering cruelly," he said. "This is terrible news."

"It is disgraceful that such blunders should be made," answered Mary, her face lighting momentarily with indignation.

"If it is a blunder, yes. Were you followed from here?"

The girl winced at the cruel suggestion that it was owing to her that Tom had been arrested.

"Can that have been the cause of his being taken?" she asked.

"I should think not. There must have been some other clew. He must have been recognized," he said; but there was not enough conviction in his words to soothe the girl.

"Oh, Tom, Tom! What have I done?" she wailed, and bent her face on her arms on the table. Suddenly she raised her head and looked searchingly at her companion. "Why did you not warn me when you were here last night?"

"I did not think there was more than the merest shadow of suspicion in the minds of the police," was the ready answer. "Do you think I could have such a thought and not tell you? If you do I had better go. If there is no trust between us we can do nothing to save Tom from the trouble."

"Forgive me," cried Mary, anxious not to offend one whose help and friendship meant so much to her lover. "I do trust you," and she put out her hand as if to detain him.

"It is more valuable now to ask you what was the result of the interview."

SAILED THE SEAS 38 YEARS.

One of His Experiences.

For thirty-eight years Capt. Loud followed the sea, most of that time as master of a vessel, and upon retiring from the water was appointed by the Secretary of the United States Treasury to superintend the seal fisheries in Alaska, which position he held five years. He relates one experience as follows:

"For several years I had been troubled with general nervousness and pain in the region of my heart. My greatest affliction was sleeplessness. I was almost impossible at any time to obtain rest and sleep. Having seen Dr. Miles' remedies advertised I began using Nervine. After taking a small quantity, I received so much benefit that I was positively convinced that the remedy contained opiates which would finally be injurious to me; but on being assured by the druggist that it was perfectly harmless, I continued to use it together with the Heart Cure. Today I can conscientiously say that Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure did more for me than anything I had ever taken. I had been treated by eminent physicians in New York and San Francisco without benefit. I owe my present good health to the judicious use of these most valuable remedies, and heartily recommend them to all afflicted as I was."

"Capt. A. P. Loud, Hampden, Me., Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure are sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or by Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5, express prepaid. They are free from all opiates and dangerous drugs."

Sold by all druggists.

What was Tom's decision? Had he meant to come back and face all, or to wait until the truth could be made clear?"

At that instant as he asked the question the suspicion of Gorrings which had prompted her question a minute before flashed into the girl's mind and warned her to be cautious in all that she told him, and not to say anything which might be used against Tom.

"I had better tell you all that I know," she answered, evading the question and wishing to gain time to think how she had best frame what she wanted to say. "He went away because of what you and Mr. Coode had said to him in the afternoon, threatening him with prosecution in the money matter; and he was not willing to come back until he knew that that was over."

"But you told him what I had said, didn't you, and that at the earliest moment possible I went to his cottage to assure him that all that affair was over and done for?"

"Yes, I told him what you had said; but he felt angry and bitter that such a threat should ever have been used."

"I see. He wanted something more than a mere promise of that kind to bring him back, I suppose. But now that affairs have taken this disastrous turn it is most important to learn what he told you as to his movements on Friday night. What did he tell you of those?"

"I did not press him; I scarcely asked him," said Mary, hesitating and stumbling over the words; "but he told me enough to convince me that he was never near the mill that night."

Reuben Gorrings listened to the confused statement in silence, and then bent his eyes on the girl's face and knitted his brows, as he answered:

"You are doing what you, no doubt, think right, Mary, in trying to screen Tom; and if you don't want to speak, I don't want to try and persuade you to do so against your will. But don't try to hoodwink me. Either you don't or you won't understand how serious matters are. Tom has got not only to convince you, but to prove to a court that his tale is the truth. My own view is this: We had better instruct some good sharp lawyer who is skilled in these cases, and leave him to say what is the best line to be taken. But of course Tom will have to deal with him candidly, and I thought if you had told me what he says I might have been able to think out a suggestion or two. For I make no secret to you, my child, that I look on the case as desperately grave and serious."

Who Says Rheumatism Can Not be Cured. My wife was confined to her bed for over two months with a very severe attack of rheumatism. We could get nothing that would afford her any relief, and as a last resort gave Chamberlain's Pain Balm a trial. To our great surprise she began to improve after the first application, and by using it regularly she was soon able to get up and attend to her house work. E. H. Johnson, of C. J. Extraordinary.

Our efforts to please have been appreciated as attested by the crowds that have visited our store every day the past week.

Rain or shine, the coming has been one steady rush. We are confident we are pleasing our friends.

Because they not only look at, but carry away in great bundles the pretty things we have provided for their buying and adornment.

The rush has been so great and we have been kept so busy that we have not had time to tell you of any of the special offerings,

But they are here many of them, all over our store, the big store.

Come and let us show you the goods and quote prices; that is all we ask, and will be perfectly satisfied with the results.
