THE RISING CURRENT.

A political cyclone swept over Indiana on Tuesday. It was as disastrous to the Democracy as a western tornado is to property. The sweep is the most complete in the history of the State. The only cities that report the election of Democratic tickets are Madison, Mt. Vernon and Washington. Ft. Wayne, usually Democratic from 2,500 to 3,000, went Republican by 400. The reliably Democratic cities of South Bend, Logansport, Terre Haute, Columbus, New Albany, Jeffersonville, LaPorte, Michigan City, Goshen, Seymour, LaFayette, Anderson, Greenfield, Hammond, Huntington, Veray, Delphi, Valparaiso, Hartford City, Plymouth, Brazil, and others broke loose from their moorings and were swept into the Republican current. The usually Republican cities greatly increased their majorities. Never before have Republican victories been so general at the Spring election. Tuesday's breeze is but a premonition of the storm that will sweep over the State and become general throughout the country in November.

No one says a good word for the House of Lords, and some of the young peers want to cut it and run for a seat in the Commons. If it were not for the present American Congress the Lords would think themselves the most incapable and unrepresentative body in the world.

The price of wool in the United States was never so low as now, nor the importations so great. The price has tumbled to the free trade line, and our farmers, in selling this year's clip will be able to figure out the deficit in their pocket-books due to Democratic "change."

HAVING legislated with John Sherman in finance, and with Thomas B. Reed in parliamentary usage, the Democrats in Congress are now receding from free trade into modified McKinleyism. Their tariff bill as now proposed is a botched job in protection.

INSTEAD of considering propositions to inflate the currency, Congress would do much better to devise means for giving circulation and usefulness to the vast amount of money that is now lying idle in the banks because nobody wants to borrow it at any price.

THE Democratic fight in the Senate against a change of date for the going into operation of the tariff bill is foolish. The date named in the bill is June 30, and nobody imagines that the measure will be passed by that time.

THE severest earthquake recorded for several years is that which has happened in Greece. The Grecian earthquake is infinitesimal compared with the shaking up the Democracy will experience this fall.

THE sugar trust and the whisky trust are controlling the Senatorial end of the Democratic party, and the dickering that is going on between the Senators and the trusts is the national scandal.

THE pleasantest dream a Democrat can have is that the calendar has been turned back two years and that he has once more the chance to vote against turning out the Republican party.

THE Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette thinks by adopting the tactics of the Indiana Republican platform on silver the silver Senators can hold the key to tariff legislation.

TUESDAY'S elections indicate that the people are becoming very tired of the three C's—Cleveland, Congress and Coxeyism.

THERE are just as many Democrats this year as ever but they seem to be voting the Republican ticket.

THE OLD MILL MYSTERY.

By Arthur W. Marchmont, B. A.

Then it flashed upon her that this confirmation of Gibbon Prawle's story was also a proof that he had been making inquiries; and that she had wronged him in supposing he had been merely wasting the time in order that Tom might get convicted.

This brought about a fresh revulsion of feeling. If Gibbon was really anxious to get Tom acquitted, it seemed perfectly clear that he himself could not be the murderer, since, as he himself had said, he would have been a fool to interfere and run the risk of drawing attention and suspicion to himself.

Next day she caught sight of Savannah walking in the direction of the mill. She was not at her looms, however, and when Reuben Gorringer came to speak to her during the afternoon Mary asked him whether he had seen Savannah.

"I have not," said Gorringer. "She sent word this morning that she could not come to work to-day. She is not very regular now. What I want to say is that Mr. Charnley wants to see you in the office now. There is something fresh about Mr. Coode's death. I think it is good news."

Mr. Charnley was the new proprietor—Mr. Coode's nephew and heir.

"I shall have finished this cut in a few minutes," she said, pointing to one of her looms, "and will come then."

Mary followed in about a quarter of an hour, but Mr. Charnley was not in the office.

"He has had to go out," said Gorringer, "and will not be back for an hour or two. He was sorry, but said it must keep until he came back," and with that Mary went back to her looms.

She waited anxiously, expecting a summons to the office, but none came; and when the day's work ended Mr. Charnley had not returned.

"He was so positive," said Gorringer, "that he would be back, and I must tell you to-night, as it was important. I should think he will be sure to find some way of telling you. He may call at your cottage."

But no message came until it was growing dark, and then Reuben Gorringer came himself with a letter from the mill owner asking Mary to go to the mill at once, as the writer had good and important news to tell.

The girl was in a flutter of excitement, and went at once. When they reached the mill Gorringer closed and locked the yard gates behind them, and did the same with the large heavy doors which led in to the factory itself.

Then he led the way through the now gloomy and deserted building to the office.

"Where is Mr. Charnley?" asked Mary, stopping on the threshold when she saw the office was empty and the gas turned down.

"He must have gone out for a moment. Never mind, he'll be here directly," said Gorringer, leading the way in. "Sit down."

"Was he here when you left to come to me?" she asked.

"Certainly he was. Don't worry yourself," and having turned up the gas he took a position between the girl and the door, leaning against the wall.

"Is there any fresh news, Mary?" he asked, in an indifferent tone as he could assume. "You know that I am bound to speak at the next hearing. I cannot put it off any longer. Have you found out anything?"

"I have found out everything," answered Mary.

"How do you mean everything?" asked Gorringer, sharply.

"I know who murdered Mr. Coode—or at any rate I know who broke into the mill on the night of his murder," answered the girl.

"Who was that?" "Gibbon Prawle. It was he who was in the mill that night."

"What!" exclaimed Gorringer, excitedly. "No, it can't be; you're mistaken," he added after a moment, in a quieter manner.

"No, I am not mistaken. He knows that I know it."

"But it's impossible. It must be impossible," said Gorringer.

"Why impossible for Gibbon if possible for Tom? How can that be?" "Oh! Oh, I mean all the other things prove that it was Tom. They all point to one conclusion."

"Then they are all wrong, as I said they were from the first."

"How are you going to prove that Tom wasn't in the mill, then?"

Tom's innocence clear no matter what other evidence may be given."

"Do you mean that you do not mind the evidence I have to give?"

"I mean that we shall prove that Tom was not in the mill—was not anywhere near it when the deed was done," answered Mary.

"You set me at defiance, then?" "Set you at defiance? What can you mean? How strange you are. You said before that nothing would please you more than that Tom's innocence should be proved and that I should be happy with him."

"I am not altogether well," he said. "I'm worried, too, a bit. You are quite wrong about Savannah. I know that she is quite respectable and is to be trusted," continued Gorringer, doggedly.

"And I am sure she is not," returned Mary, with as much emphasis. "Now, wherever can Mr. Charnley be? He must have gone. I cannot stay. Whatever it is he wants to say must wait till the morning."

"She got up from her chair and walked towards the door."

"Don't go, Mary," said Gorringer, standing in front of the door. "Don't go. It isn't often I get the chance of having you to myself. Stay awhile here." He spoke with gentle persuasion.

"This is no time for yielding to feelings of friendship," replied Mary. "There is work to be done—serious and important work."

"But Mr. Charnley will be disappointed. Stay a little longer. It is such a pleasure for me to have you alone, all to myself; to look at you, to feel you are close by me, to know you trust me."

(To Be Continued.)

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that it becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spongy bones are attacked, and frequently destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis, which is usually the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results by its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only cure. Call upon your druggist for it.

Hood's and Only Hood's. Are you weak and weary, overworked and tired? Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine you need to purify and quicken your blood and to give you appetite and strength. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy any other. Any effort to substitute another remedy is proof of the merit of Hood's.

Hood's PILLS are the best after-dinner pills, assist digestion, cure headache. Try a box.

Lung Troubles show a tendency toward Consumption. A often the beginning wait until your condition is more serious. Take Scott's Emulsion the Cream of Cod-liver Oil, at once. It overcomes all the conditions that invite the Consumption Germs. Physicians, the world over, endorse it.
