WEEKLY REVIEW—CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1866.

For the Review.

LAPOGA, September 27, 1866.

MR. EDITOR.—I have been informed from reliable authority, that in different parts of the District the radicals have circulated a report that I was dissatisfied with the action of the Democratic Central Committee of this district, and was anxious myself to be a candidate for Congress.

Permit me to say that such is not the fact. The action of the Central Committee, under the circumstances, meets my hearty concurrence, and the present conservative candidate, Hon. John Purdie, shall receive my cordial support.

I cannot close this letter without urging the democratic voters of this District not to let the golden opportunity presented at this election, pass without improving it. A fanatical and revolutionary Congress has made open war upon the long established and cherished principles of our government, by a wholesale destruction of States with all their rights and privileges and benefits, by abridging the liberties of the people in denying to them, in both States and territories, the right of controlling their own domestic affairs, by voting to themselves enormous salaries when the people was already groaning under oppressive taxation, by attempting, in a time of great excitement, to confer the rank of citizenship, with all its honors and responsibilities, upon a slavish race of barbarians totally unfit, either by nature or education, for the honor or they seek to impose upon them, and in their madness and blind rage have turned their venom upon every man who refuses to assist them in their insolent grip upon power. Even the President of their choice, whose only offense to them is fidelity to the Constitution, and the leading members of his Cabinet, who have for six years shaped the policy of the country, with the officers and soldiers who fought under the old flag during the war but now doubt their being immaculate are all alike subjects of their anathema and abuse. And now we have the opportunity of rebuking these men and forever stopping their destructive career. In a contest like this who will falter? I trust every Democrat in the district will consider the present issue alone, and give to the present conservative candidate, Mr. Purdie, the same support they so generously gave me two years ago. Let us unite with the conservative Johnson men at the polls and secure a victory that will indeed give peace to the land.

JAMES F. HARNEY.

The Radical Pilgrims—One of the Party becomes Alarmed and Disgusted, and leaves the Foul Crowd.

One of the Radical pilgrims designated by the Philadelphia Muliato Convention to follow in the tracks of the President and address the people, a Mr. H. G. Norton of Texas, has left in disgust his fellows, and is going home to denounce their hypocrisy and selfishness. He has been speaking, bedding and eating with Brownlow, Jack Hamilton, Hunnicutt and the others, attended their secret conferences, and was in their confidence. He says their secret designs started and disgusted him. Their main object he declares to be to live easy with out work, and get what money they can while the present excitement lasts. In order to successfully carry out this game, they are ready to make their speeches to suit the local and their audiences. Negro suffrage and equality will be advocated where Radicalism is rampant, and not mentioned where the doctrine is to be kept in the back ground until after the election.

In their meetings among themselves, they make no secret of their determination, after the fall elections, to incite negro insurrection. They say they must have immediate negro suffrage or negro insurrection. In their confidential conversations, they say this is a good way to get a living to-day. When the elections are over, something new must be started, and their only hope is in a negro insurrection. That will bring on another war, in which they expect the Southern people will be annihilated.

The discovery of these designs, Mr. Norton, determined him to leave their company. It did not rest this exposure, by Mr. Norton, of the designs of these torch-and-turpentine incendiaries toward the South. All that a person need to do, to discover what their aim is, is to read the speeches of Jack Hamilton, Brownlow and Hunnicutt. They disclose the diabolical purposes these Radicals have in view, in their efforts to fire the Northern heart.

Oru voted $7,000,000 to support the negroes of the South in idleness and improvidence. This is a sum equal to half of that which defrayed the whole expenses of the Government forty years ago. But while he could thus devote millions to the able-bodied negroes, he had not a cent to give to the poor and helpless in his own district. Destitute families of soldiers in the West were left to starve by Oru and his colleagues in Congress, in order that the negro could be taken care of in the South.

FRED. DOUGLASS, in his Speech at Columbus, Ohio last Saturday, said: "The black man must have three boxes; the cartridge-box, the jury-box, and the ballot-box. The first," said Fred, "he has already, and the other two he is bound to have; and in order to hasten the day when he shall be placed upon perfect equality with the white man, it is of the highest importance to elect the Radical candidates to Congress, wherever it is possible to do it."

$10,000.

Ten thousand dollars were voted by Congress to a young woman to make a bust of Mr. Lincoln. She never made a bust before, except of "herself naked to the waist," according to Mrs. Swiss-heim, who further describes her as a lady who calls upon Senators and Representatives at their lodgings."

That's the way the money goes, Pop goes the weasel.

The Radicals call the President the "Great Usurper," whereupon a friend of the New Orleans Picayune remarks that he will be found the greatest use-up-er of the Radicals.

First Book of Chronicles.
CHAPTER I.

1. And it came to pass that on the fourteenth day of the eighth month, in the year sixty-six, the Democrats and Conservatives of the nation came together in the city of Penn.

2. And they did this, that our Union might be more firmly bound, and that the treason of the Radicals might be made manifest.

3. For behold though peace had again come to bless the land, they being possessed of the Devil, had no rest.

4. But the Heavenly Hyenas, the Preachers, and Harlots, and Thieves, and Murderers ceased not from their desire to raise sedition and to shed blood.

5. And they did meet in the secret chambers of the Leagues, and with malice in their hearts, laid snares to entrap the feet of the unwary and men of simple mind.

6. Sending forth messengers to say all manner of evil things of Andrew, the King, and seeking that his blood might be shed.

7. And they strove, by all manner of wickedness, to divide the people of the nation and to sow discord and contention.

8. Thus they did, that they might again have power to stretch forth their hand and steal and have abundance from the toil of the laborer and the tax payer.

9. But when the great meeting of the people had taken place, the wise men and elders stood up and gave their voices for Union and Peace.

10. And these same men from the North and from the South, from the East and from the West, men from the uttermost parts of the land.

11. And having given thanks that the sword had been sheathed, and that they had again come together as brethren, they said:

12. Let us be no more as enemies, but as old, of one household, and cursed forever be the hand that shall seek to loose our hands.

13. By the evil deeds of the hot headed and hasty, and the schemes of cravelling plotters of evil, were we set together at war.

14. Behold we have discovered their hypocrisy, the deceits of their hearts have been laid bare.

15. Let us now join hands for our country, and be foes to those only who hate government and laws.

16. The sword shall henceforth remain in its scabbard, and we will have peace in all our borders."

17. And they embraced each other, and swear an oath to remain as friends and brethren until time shall be no more.

18. And, behold, the tidings having gone forth, there was much joy throughout the land.

19. But the Devil, seeing these things was moved with great rage and violence.

20. And going forth, he went straight way to his children, the Radicals, and said unto them:

21. See ye not the acts of the Democrats and friends of Peace and Justice.

22. If the things they would should come to pass, then shall our wars and tumults cease, and we shall be undone.

22. And to his son Butler, surnamed the "Beast," he held forth a "spoon" saying: Behold in this the sign of thy faith and loyalty, by which thou hast been pledged to me.

24. Go thou, therefore, as my chosen aid, and see then that this detestable Peace be broken and the land be again deluged in blood, or thou shall sup sorrow and have no spoon.

25. Thou shall beat no more the helpless with the scourge of the satrap—thou shalt add no more to thy hoards the silver, and gold, and fine linen of the people.

26. The cords and toys of gold and silver which thou hast captured from the babies of the South, will I wrest from thee; thou shalt sing no Psalms from thy stolen Bible.

27. And the Brute, bowing down, kissed the hoof of his master, saying:

28. All these things will I do, and more if thou will bless me.

29. And going forth he went among the people to do the work of his master, breathing blood, and rapine, and slaughter.

30. Then the Devil, going unto Thaddeus, surnamed of the hoof, and Oliver, surnamed "Moxa," bade them put on their armor for the fight.

31. Saying: Have I not chosen thee for mine from among thousands? In these have I delighted in the high places.

32. Gird thyself hastily, and go forth in my cause or behold all is lost.

33. To thee have I given the power of abuse, and the sharp sword of sarcasm.

34. I have given to thee the cloak of Philanthropy, under its folds thou shalt have power for much evil.

35. Sound the trumpet, and call those together our friends, that we may consult together.

36. For the work of the Democrats and Conservatives must be undone, or we are vanquished.

37. And the "Beast," and Thaddeus, and "Moxa," and Brownlow the Gospel and chief Priest of the Hell to come, went forth singing the canticles of Devils and spitting venom.

38. And they sent forth heralds, and gathered persons, and harlots, and cotton thieves, and bull niggers, and school marmes into the city of Penn.

39. And from the multitude there went forth a great smell, a mixture of strange odors, of balsam and of Moxa, and of rosemary and of niger.

40. And their acts will I write in another book, that the memory of them may not pass away, and they escape the damnation of the people.

ANNA DICKINSON, a white woman, and Fred Douglass, a negro, were the greater orators of the Philadelphia Radical Convention. They were especially thanked by it for their addresses. When the resolution for negro suffrage in all the States and Territories passed the Convention, Anna Dickinson exclaimed that her bosom was too full for utterance.

Theodore Tilton, one of the editors of the New York Independent, and a public advocate of miscegenation, or amalgamation of the races, walked into the Convention arm-in-arm with the negro Fred Douglass, thus giving a practical social exemplification of the doctrine.

In the Radical Philadelphia Convention the motto was a union of colors, black and white. In the Philadelphia Conservative Convention it was a union of States. The one had a negro and a white man arm in arm as a typical representation; the other had South Carolina and Massachusetts united in friendly embrace.

The Radical Congress passed a law imposing negro suffrage upon the District of Columbia, against the wish of the people, unanimously expressed at the polls.

For this law Oru voted.

"How is the Election Going?"

The Cincinnati Enquirer says: To those who ask this question we make the following suggestions: Do you know of any one who has not voted the Radical ticket heretofore who is going to do it this year? Do you not know of more or less of your acquaintances who have been Radicals who will vote this fall against them? The first question you answer in the negative; the second in the affirmative. Your experience is the experience of every body. There is not a neighborhood in the whole country where there is not one or more changes against the Abolitionists. Next week we will publish the whole thing, so that who he who reads may read—Corinthian Friend.
