A Capital Bargain for Printers.

We have an excellent Job Hand Press, (Washington pattern,) nearly as good as new, which will be sold at a great bargain. It cost before the war $165, and is warranted to be perfect in every particular. Bed 16x23, platen 14x19 inches. We will box and deliver the press at the depot here for $100.

The great project of building the east and west railway from Indianapolis to Danville is attracting marked attention abroad. It is conceded by rail road men, that the road, when opened will be the most direct route from the Atlantic cities to San Francisco. In 1870, four years from this time, the great iron railway across the continent will be completed. It is this fact that has given such a stimulus to the building of east and west roads whose geographical location connects them with the Pacific trade. Never in the history of any country was there ever such a golden prize offered as is presented Montgomery county in accepting the favorable propositions offered to secure this road, which virtually places her, for all time to come, on the great highway connecting the Atlantic and Pacific. All along the route, from Indianapolis to Danville, we have the gratifying intelligence that the people are alive to their interest, and that the subscription donations is being rapidly made up.

Nobody can, in justice to themselves or purses, buy any Drugs without first examining the immense stock at Binford & Brother's on Washington street. This establishment is one of the largest and most complete in the city, and they always sell, at wholesale or retail, at lowest market rates, and at one uniform price.

It is acknowledged by Physicians, Druggists and every body else who ever used it, that Dr. Strickland's Cough Balsam will cure Coughs, Colds, Asthma, and all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, quicker and better than any other remedy known. We would recommend our readers to try this great remedy, knowing it to be a No. 1.

Tribulations of a Loyal Man—He Adopts the New Radical Platform of Freelo-

ism and Goes for Another Man's Wife.

We learn from a reliable source, that a prominent limb of the law in an adjoining county, noted for his malignant radicalism and puritanical bigotry, who recently became a gay and dashing widower, and who is reported to be possessed of many greenbacks and much postal, and noted for his loyalty, fell in love with his neighbor's wife, yea, like David of old, he cast loving glances upon her, and with the wiles of the serpent,

"Beguiled her ears with the soft flattery of his tongue."

It is needless to say that like the wife of the loyal little, she yielded to his blandishments. Love's dalliances however could not long be concealed, the dark curtains of night somehow betrayed an envious neighbor, exposing the lovers to more than suspicion. The husband, good soul, became curious, and to satisfy a morbid desire to know more, he got out that he was going on a journey, and providing himself with script and staff, started off ostensibly on his tour. His absence soon became known to our gay Lothario, who, in his joy determined to "have a night of it," and with his psalmist he warbled forth the delightful strain—

"Then let the wide world wag as it will,

"I'll be gay and happy still."

With the first appearance of the twinkling stars, he stole, under the soft rays of Venus to the embraces of his amantia. Singly encoined, the lovers took their fill of love and whiled the "happy hours away" until the clock told the midnight hour of twelve. Scarcely had the chimes of the last stroke that marked the hours died away when there came a thundering rap at the door, a terrible summons to open sesame, which aroused the guilty couple to a lively sense of the "situation." Instantly our Don Juan leaped with a frantic energy to the floor. Seeing no hope of escape from the house, he darted under the bed. In the meantime the fallen Eve, who had by this time recovered her composure, unbarred the door and let in her liege lord, who, after a short investigation in the dark, retired, satisfied in his own mind that nothing wrong had taken place during his absence. He was allowed but a few minutes however to repose his wearied limbs. His wife complained of being seriously ill—a sudden attack of cramp cholic having seized her, and she insisted that he go for the doctor immediately. The good man arose, and hastily dressing himself, started on his errand. On his way he upbraided himself for allowing the green-eyed monster to take possession of his soul, and doubt the chastity of his better half. While thus ruminating, he thrust his hand down into his breeches pocket with the exclamation: "Jenkins, what a fool you are to doubt her," when lo and behold, his hand came in contact with a large knife and a bunch of keys. Amazed and bewildered, he doubted for a moment his identity. With a shudder he convulsively sounded the other pocket when he drew forth a phreatic packet book well stuffed with greenbacks. Horrors upon horrors, this was more than mortal man could bear; (we don't mean the greenbacks.) On further inspection the fact was revealed that he was encased in another man's breeches, the amorous owner having dropped them by the side of the bed when he retired with his chamber, and in his haste at concealment forgot to draw them in under the bed with him. This was "the feather that broke the camel's back." For a moment he stood like an enraged tiger, when a happy thought struck him, and he resolved to ramose and leave the choleric partner of his former joys to the tender mercies of the gay deceiver, and exclaiming with the dusky Moor of Venice—

"He who steals my purse steals trash,

"But he who steals my wife steals my soul."

And leaves me poor indeed."

Justifying himself, he lit out to unknown regions with the purse said to contain over a thousand dollars in greenbacks, and has not since been heard of.
