CAPTURED THE CASH

A Daring Thief Empties a Bank Vault at Hurley, Wis.

HE GETS AWAY WITH NEARLY $40,000

In the Glare of an Electric Light and Visibly from the Street He Coolly Unlocks the Doors and Proceeds to Help Himself.

NO CLEW TO THE ROBBER.

ASHLAND, Wis., Sept. 23.—The most cleverly planned, daring and successful bank robbery in the criminal annals of this State was executed at Hurley Friday night, when the Iron Exchange Bank was entered by robbers and nearly $40,000 in cash, left there for the night by the United States Express Company, was taken. Periodically the Ashland and Germania Mining Company pay off its employees, numbering over 1,000, who work in the iron mines near Hurley, and for this purpose $41,700 was shipped from the Ashland National Bank to Hurley Friday. The treasure was sent in a dozen sacks, and upon its arrival in Hurley a little after 9 o'clock p. m. it was removed to the Iron Exchange Bank in a wheelbarrow. The time-lock of the safe inside the vault had been set and the cash could not be put inside of it. The company's agent consented to have the money placed in the vault outside the safe for the night. It was not considered a deposit, and the agent was given no receipt.

After the express package containing the mining company's money had been locked up the cashier, Mr. Reynolds, with the paying teller left the place and went to the theater. They were very late, as the affair at the bank had kept them until nearly 10 o'clock. A little over an hour afterward Mr. Reynolds returned to the bank, in which building his sleeping apartments are situated, and as he passed the door with J. O. Langdon, a friend who intended spending the night with him, he looked into the brightly-lighted room and saw the vault door was ajar. With an exclamation the young man opened the door and entered the counting-room, followed by his companion. The outer vault door was nearly half open, and touching against it, wide open, stood the inner vault door. The package which the cashier had left an hour before on the stone floor of the vault was gone. The other contents of the vault had been disturbed but little, if at all, over the floor, out in the counting-room, or even in the sleeping-room adjoining, gold and silver coins were found. The package had been opened, and some of the coin was rejected, as it was found in a corner of the vault.

The alarm was given at once, and in an hour the whole town was aroused, and hundreds of detectives, professional and amateur, had begun the task of finding the robber. A couple of gentlemen who passed the bank at 10:31 said they saw a man working at the door of the vault, but as he had on the cashier's well-known office coat and cap, and as the electric lights were so bright that no thought of any one rifling the place could be entertained, they passed on without a suspicion that the man they looked at was the cool-robbber on record and that a fortune was just in his grasp. Following quickly on the heels of this statement came a man bearing the cashier's coat and hat which he had found in an alley a short distance from the bank. The roads, both rail and wagon, leading from town were at once put under guard, and men went galloping out on every highway in the hope of overtaking the fugitive, but there was absolutely no trace of him. Some person had entered the bank either by a transom over the rear door or by a key, had opened the outer vault door, to do which he must have known the combination, and had opened the inner door, which required a Yale key of a pattern not easily duplicated.

Cashier Reynolds, when seen, said that no one but himself and Assistant Cashier Perrin had ever obtained the combination of the vault door. The officers of the bank held a meeting Saturday, and after the most careful inquiry decided that Cashier Reynolds and the teller could not have been implicated in the affair. It was agreed that as the bank had given no receipt for the money and only accepted the custody without compensation, in an irregular manner and purely from accommodation, they could only be held for ordinary care, which was exercised when both doors were locked on the treasure. Consequently the express company must lose the money. The regular pay for the miners was postponed until more money could be sent from Ashland.

The original package contained $41,000; nearly $2,000 was left behind, either in the vaults or scattered about the floors. Consequently the robber must have secured $39,000. The weight of the money is so great that no man could carry it on his person any distance without arousing suspicion, and this leads to the belief that the coin has been buried somewhere at or near the town and that it will probably remain there until it is safe for the daring culprit to return and dig it up. The paper money could easily be carried by one man without suspicion, but all travelers will be subjected to severe espionage for weeks to come. Hurley is always honored with the presence of a large number of rough characters. Sometimes they are men who work occasionally at the mines, but oftener they belong to the class that never toils. These persons are being watched to-night and every suspicious act is noted. It is thought the regular custom of sending these large sums of money from Ashland to this city has been known to outsiders, and that they have been planning this crime for months. They could have secured the keys and waited till the favorable opportunity offered, and to learn the combination would be their only task.

The Iron Exchange Bank has a capital of $25,000 and is officered as follows: James C. Reynolds, president; Willis S. Reynolds, cashier. It is a State bank and was incorporated in 1885.

The mines of the Ashland Mining Company and those of the Germania Mining Company are located here. The Ashland Mining Company is composed of the Hayes Bros. of this place and the Colby Bros. of Milwaukee. The Germania mine is owned by the Hayes Bros.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 23.—A special from

Hurley says there are no developments in the bank robbery which was committed there late Friday night, and by which thieves obtained nearly $10,000 belonging to the United States Express Company. No clews have been found and no arrests as yet have been made. Sunday morning the man who found Mr. Reynolds' coat and hat found a bag containing $575 in silver dollars on the site of the old foundry. This amount was immediately turned over to the express company.

A base-ball trust has been formed. It is composed equally of ball-players and capitalists. All of the members of the Brotherhood of Base-Ball Players are in the scheme. Grounds will be secured and clubs placed in Chicago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Brooklyn. Four prizes are to be the incentive for winning games, the champion club to receive $3,000. The receipts are to be divided into three parts, one of which goes to the players, one to their backers and the remainder to be divided equally among the clubs at the close of the season. All players are to be stockholders, and each club is to have two managers, one a player and the other a backer. This combination is the result of the objectionable features in the arbitrary laws of the National League and American Association. Captain Anson and Messrs. Burns and Williamson, of the Chicago club, are about the only players of prominence not connected with the new plan.
