THE OHIO CAMPAIGN.

There is considerable politics to the square yard in Ohio just now. The campaign in that State is getting decidedly interesting, and immense numbers of people attend the announced public speakings in various parts of the State to hear the issues discussed. The republicans have brought every prominent speaker from abroad that they could secure, to help out Foraker, their candidate for Governor. His opponent, Hon. James Campbell, the democratic candidate, is making a very vigorous and effective canvass, discusses the issues demanded and is dealing telling blows to the corrupt gang that has ruled Ohio for several years. Of course the chances of success in that State, which has all the machinery of the State and Government to aid it are not the best, yet the honest, sober thought of the people appears to be aroused. The present depressed condition of business, the aggressions of trusts, the unfairness toward most of the people of the present tariff laws, has set them to thinking, and although having a great majority to overcome, it looks at present as if the banner of Foraker would be trailed in the dust and that democracy would once more triumph in the Buckeye State. From the desperate efforts being put forth by the Foraker gang it would indicate at least they consider the State as decidedly doubtful themselves.

THE INDIANAPOLIS ELECTION.

Since the election of last year nothing has certainly been so unsatisfactory to President Harrison as the election last week in Indianapolis, his old home. It is undoubtedly a rebuke to him and the crew around him administered by many of his old neighbors. The democracy of that city have not had a greater triumph in many years than that of last week. In the matter of "state pride" we heard much last year, but "city pride" seems now to be on top in Indianapolis and resulted in the defeat of the majority of the Harrison candidates in that city. Gen. John Coburn, a prominent citizen, a soldier of the late war, a former Federal office holder and as strongly equipped socially for the race for mayor as any man that could have been selected, was defeated by a big majority. The defeat was largely brought about by republicans who have observed the actions of the Harrison-Halford-New ring, added to the general corruption that has distinguished the republican administration of that city. It would appear that, if there is any thing, His Excellency, President Ben, would like to hear that it was his party had carried his city and elected republican officials, and the failure to do so must inwardly cause him much disagreeable reflection.

REPRESENTATIVE BYNUM, of this State, tells some very interesting stories of the way the Administration is dispensing patronage in various parts of this State. United States Treasurer Huston, he says, who was chairman of the State Republican Committee during the Presidential campaign, went about among the local bosses collecting contributions to the party fund, and doling out to each contributor assurances of the amount of patronage to which his individual subscription would entitle him. Unhappily the President failed to carry out many of these agreements. One man, for example, gave some hundreds of dollars, besides procuring endorsements from a majority of the leading republicans of his town for postmaster, but, lo! when the post-office changed hands, it went, not to him, but a comparatively unknown and unsuspected merchant who dealt in shoes. It took a good while for the defeated candidate to grasp the reason for the miscarriage of plans; but he presently learned that his lucky rival was in the habit of buying his stock in trade of Mr. McKee, General Harrison's son-in-law, and was considered a valuable customer.

THE election in Ohio occurs, we believe, about the 5th of next month, and as the time draws nearer the prospects brighten for the success of Campbell and the entire democratic State ticket. Campbell is making an excellent canvass, and the political indications are much in favor of him. The people are tired of Foraker and his third term race, are disgusted with the dictatorial style and impetuosity of the man, are not in sympathy with him or his methods. The Shermans, McKinnleys, and other republican leaders of that State would not read their clothes if Foraker was defeated, in fact, it is believed, desire it. These men and other republicans are not disposed to wear the Foraker collar, and if defeated it will hardly be considered a surprise, in spite of the 25,000 majority of his party last year.

They keep gathering in suspects in the Cronin murder case at Chicago and occasionally select a juror for the coming trial, but the termination of the trial is a long distance away. There is every reason to believe that several of the indicted men had a hand in the cowardly business of killing Cronin, but will they be convicted? That is the question. From the extraordinary cunning and shrewdness being put forth at the outset by the attorneys for the defence the trial bids fair to be long and desperately contested, and from the numerous books, crooks and subterfuges it is doubted, if pushed at all, it will be in proportion to the enormity of the crime which so much points to them as having been guilty of. There are too many loop holes in this day and age by which scoundrels go unpunished, and this Cronin case would bid fair to be a suitable instance of this.

ONCE an office-holder, always one or aiming to be, would seem true. Here is old Dick Thompson of Terre Haute, a man who has held office of some kind almost since the early settlement of Indiana, and who should have been rich and retired long ago, is an applicant for the position of Collector of Internal Revenue, worth $4,500 per year and stands a good chance of securing it. Professional office-seekers are entirely too numerous in this country, and there should be a limit placed to their ambition in that line.

HARRISON vigorously condemned Cleveland for keeping public money deposited in the national banks. His private secretary accused him of corrupting. Seven months or the Harrison administration have gone and the Cleveland policy, once so bitterly denounced, is followed and adopted by Harrison. Why? Harrison, like Cleveland, has to avert a financial panic. On March 4, when Cleveland retired, there were on deposit in the national banks.....$48,818,991.63. Oct. 1 there were.....47,746,882.39 on deposit in these banks. This makes the puny reduction of in seven months of.....$1,072,109.24 Harrison was a hypocrite during then or is now. The facts will warrant no other conclusion.

ALTHOUGH near a month has passed since Corporal Tanner was bounced the administration with all its brain work, has been unable to select a man to fill the position of commissioner of pensions. The selection requires delicate work. The office is, in fact, political one. The administration wants the Grand Army with it in 1892, and, of course, a man from its ranks will have to be chosen. At the same time the administration would, perhaps, prefer some veteran wire-pulling politician. Between the two ideas Benny is racking his brain who to choose. A score of names from many states have been spoken of but none of them appear to fill the bill. In the meantime the "re-rating" business progresses very slowly.

REPRESENTATIVE RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, who has been unwell for a long time is now reported to be recovering, and from which a daily paper of the east remarks that his services are greatly needed in behalf of the minority (democratic) in Congress. When it is known to every one that Randall is body and soul in favor of the tariff and is aided by republican manufacturers in his election every time he makes the race in Pennsylvania the fallacy of such a remark will be seen at once. No, so far as Randall ever being of use to the democracy the party cannot see it and would prefer that he remain quiet or go over to the republican party which befits him best.

KANSAS with all the blowing done for it is not yet free from misfortune, at least, in some parts of the State. In fact there appears many drawbacks to the state's progress and many features that would seem to make it undesirable as a state for permanent habitation. Last week couriers, it was stated, arrived at Topeka asking aid for 900 people starving, their crops having been ruined by hot winds. Only a year or two ago the crops were reported ruined by excessive drouths, and a few years before that by grasshoppers. It may be a glorious state, but we prefer a state where there are fewer glories of the kind spoken of above.

A MANSION belonging to one of the Studebakers at South Bend, and costing $300,000 was burned last week. There was but $25,000 insurance. It would seem that generally speaking there is little sympathy for any one's loss who will put that much money in a residence in this country, when one costing two-thirds less should satisfy the taste of any man of sense, and when there are so many worthy objects of charity around him needing the other two-thirds. Men building costly mansions do so from the vanity of having people talk about them more than from personal comfort.

THEY are to have an election over in Racoon township, Parke county, to decide upon whether or no the taxpayers of said township shall give Crawford $12,000 to build his Midland railroad through it. The citizens of that township should see that the exact conditions of the contract are complied with in every respect before paying one cent for the road. Taxpayers voting railroad subsidies almost always get sold, and there will be no exception in this case unless they are careful, exacting and understand the situation.

At a meeting, last week of the woman suffragists at Rushville, at which Mrs. Helen Gouger presided, Mrs. Susan B. Anthony made a speech in which the ideas brought forth were considered entirely too far in advance for this age. Mrs. Susan thought probably that the time for women to wear trousers, smoke cigars and swear had arrived, and for an inoffensive opinion like that was denounced. It is terrible the manner in which they receive Susan's views.

A TROTTER horse, Axtell by name, who made a record unknown to any other horse of same age, sold at Terre Haute for $105,000, the highest price ever paid for any four-footed animal. The adage of Geo. Buchanan, the king's fool, that "a fool and his money is soon parted," seems fully illustrated by many horse admirers in this age, and that the persons buying Axtell would give such a price, proves the truth of it.

SENATOR Manderson, of Nebraska, a splendid pet of Tanner, who, by the re-voting process, had about $4,000 added to his bank account, has, after some weeks, had the conscience not to retain it and sends it back with thanks. It is probable that the re-voting business has ruined a check and that personal favorites, will, hereafter, stand on the same footing as other applicants for pensions.

THE left-handed compliments bestowed upon Harrison by many of his former admirers through their ballots at the Indianapolis election last week, would indicate that "state pride" has lost much of its attraction since November last.

A BOY fifteen years of age and a girl fourteen, were married in Brown county, this state, one day last week, the parents consenting. If the newly married couple are not childish their parents would seem to be.

W. C. SMITH, treasurer of the G. A. R. post at St. Louis, ran away with $1,200 belonging to his post. He is a surplus smasher and would be a good man to serve the Harrison administration.

SEVERAL of the officers of the court in Chicago that is to try the Cronin murderers have been detected in trying to bribe some of the jurors selected.

King Alforsen, of Spain, weighs thirty-five pounds.

ORIGIN OF A GRAVE YARD.

An Interesting Local Reminiscence of Long Ago.

The A. S. Byrd grave-yard is located three miles south-west of Ladoga, in Scott township. Regarding the location of that spot for a burying ground, a correspondent of the Ladoga Leader signing himself "Willow Tree" furnishes the following interesting reminiscence: It has been a question frequently referred to in the selection of this spot as a burying ground, by Jonathan Byrd, whether it was its natural loveliness or the facts known to him in connection with the Indian grave at a little point a few steps south, that influenced his mind.

At the time when the Miamis, under Peter Cornstalk, were arranging to remove from Cornstalktown to Thornton, 1826, an Indian girl from some cause unknown to the white settlers, died and was buried in this grave, rudely dug, and cased in with four slabs split from a tree, bottom, top and sides, about one foot wide, and the same length of the corpse, about two feet under the ground, and over the top a pen was built of small poles, cut by their Tomahawks. In the year 1830, when Alfred Kelley, an eccentric young man was learning to read under the tutelage of Mr. A. S. Byrd of nights, before the light made by shell-bark, lit in the "cat and clay" chimney of Mr. Byrd's cabin. Young Kelley had some vague, illiterate, back woods notion of medicine, and as a step in the direction of a coming doctor he exhumed this Indian girl in the interest of science, so called. After making such an examination as his torch light would allow, and pow-wow-ing with about as much intelligence as a monkey would over the shell of a green turtle in the sands of Florida, he returned the poor Indian girl to her Aborigine Sarcophagus, Alfred satisfying himself that he had scored one on the Esculapian ladder of fame.

In March, 1833, some boys in a hunt for Turkey peas then coming up, took in mind to see what was in an Indian grave, and put in Sunday afternoon in opening it out. The body was wrapped in blue broadcloth, very nice, with broad wristlets, nose pendant and ear bobs, of silver, all in good order, though all the body had wasted away except the skeleton.

In the year 1837, in the time of harvest, George Heckathorn was reaping at Mr. Byrd's, dressed in the usual regulation suit—town linen pants and shirt, barefooted; and at noon while resting from the heat of the field, Mr. Heckathorn pursued the family of Mr. Byrd to allow him to take a look into the Indian grave; so all the boys and Mr. Byrd, led by Heckathorn with grumbling ho on his shoulder, marched with silent tread over the branch to that mysterious spot. The sticks being cleared away, Heckathorn raised up his digger and brought it down near the head of the grave, out jumped a ground squirrel and ran up his breeches leg and up under his shirt to the collar on his back. George let drop the grubbing hoe in consternation and stood stark stiff jumping up and down, exclaiming "Good Lord! Good Lord!" scared to death, thinking it was the Indian's ghost in the form of a ground squirrel that was haunting him with sharp toes. All affright, Mr. Byrd picked up the hoe and without saying one word marched to the house, all the rest following, and as far as the Byrd and Heckathorn families are concerned the poor Indian girl had no need to fear future molestation. WILLOW TREE.

They he clasped her with emotion,
Drew the maiden to his breast,
Whispered rows of true devotion,
The old, old tale,—you know the rest.

From his circled arms unspringing,
With a tear she turned away,
And her voice with sorrow ringing,
"I shall not see my bridal day."

This dramatic speech broke him up badly; but when she explained that her apprehensions were founded on the fact of an inherited predisposition to consumption in her family, he calmed her fears, bought a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical discovery for her, and she is now the incarnation of health. For all bronchial, throat, and lung affections, it is a potent remedy.
