"Diamond Dick" Bobs Up.

George B. McClellan, or as he is known from ocean to ocean, "Diamond Dick," was in the city last night on his way from his home at Leavenworth, Kan., to the Atlanta exposition. Mr. McClellan is a gentleman of fine presence and a perfect type of the kind of men who have made the far west an abiding place in which the tenderfoot from the effete east can live and grow up with the country without the possibility of having his scalp tenderly raised by savages, natives or otherwise. He had charge of the Indian village at the world's fair at Chicago and did much to render that feature of the great exposition one of great interest to the thousand of visitors.

"Diamond Dick" is a nephew of the late
