

THE BIG STORE

Autumn . . . Announcement.

The season for heavier clothing is again at hand. For many months we have been planning that we might say to you at this time: "Come, we are ready with our usual well selected and up-to-date stock." Our buyers have just returned from the markets where they selected the latest and best the manufacturers of Europe and America have produced. The stocks in the East are very small, and desirable merchandise is likely to be scarce long before the snow flies but we have provided a goodly assortment as usual.

CLOAKS AND FURS

The modish things in this line are short jackets in plain Beaver or rough Boucle Cloths trimmed in braid and buttons. Capes of seal plush handsomely lined with changeable or figured silks will also be largely worn this season. For those desiring wraps of warmth as well as style we have selected an elegant line of Fur and heavy cloth capes.

DRESS GOODS.

Our line of high novelty dress stuffs is larger than ever before and we have spared no pains to get the very latest in cloths and colors and colors. Some of the most desirable stuffs answer to the following names: Mohair figures, Wool Figured Solids, Jacquard Mohairs, Black Amazone, Diagonal Melange, Canvas Cloths, Faced Cloths, Cheviots, Grain Mohairs, Vicuna Kurl Cloth, etc. They come in New Shades of Dahlia Green, Blue, Brown, Fawns and Grays. We are also showing an elegant assortment of Plaids and the new Rob Roy checks. We are the sole agents for the famous B. Priestly & Co. and "Gold Medal" brand black goods, and are showing a complete line of smooth and rough cloths, both plain and figured. Every yard of these goods are guaranteed by the manufacturers in weave and color. The appearance of a dress when completed is made or marred by the trimmings and linings. You know our reputation on both lines.

T. M. Patterson at Lafayette.

The Hon. Thomas M. Patterson, of Denver, Col., addressed a magnificent audience at the opera house at Lafayette Wednesday night. A large number of women was present and added grace to the occasion.

Mr. Patterson was the guest of James Murdoch while in Lafayette and was escorted to the opera house by Mr. Murdoch. Mr. Patterson was quite hoarse and spoke with difficulty, but despite this fact, he talked for two hours and was given close attention by the audience. The greater portion of his address was devoted to the continual shrinkage in the value of every kind of property and commodities and the enhancing value of money. He said that the shrinkage in value of everything except money is closing factories, making farming unprofitable and is driving men from farm and factory to the larger cities to compete with those now in employment. He referred to the sudden drop in the price of silver when the Sherman purchasing act was repealed and the closing of the silver mines throwing thousands of men out of employment. He criticised McKinley for permitting himself to be forced into his present position when he was already on record as opposed to the demonstration of silver.

When one is bitten by a rabid dog one lives out his days and nights with the poison in his blood and awaits the final demonstration. In fear and trembling, So it is that when once one has accumulated the Broadway and Bohemia habit, and, finding it hurtful, reforms, he waits the time when the poison will work again and find its fruition.

Mr. Wiley Carey of Tennessee reformed and went to his college and studied hard; found early hours of slumber and all those staid things which are the man's who is doing right. Whereas Cooley, the servant, smiled much and grew cheerful. Said he in comment:

"Yuh kin allus tell a geman by his acts. Mistah Wiley see he ain' doin' jes' what Miss Cha'ity want him to, an' when I gin him uh hnt he jes' straighten up like uh thur-bred hoss an' go tuh wuk. Tha's thu way wiv uuh geman."

Mr. Wiley did straighten, but walking always erect has its pains. By and by he stooped just a little; dropped his lecture room and went down to the places where horses race. In Tennessee men and horses are very close to each other. Cable cars and electric roads can have no being about a plantation, and men ride horses. From riding a horse one gets the notion of riding the best one. A brisk dash through a country lane, with a neighbor alongside, is the natural sequence, and the race course as a demonstration of horse ability under the saddle is the final. Mr. Wiley had a heritage of that in his veins. A friend told him that there was horse racing in New York, and Carey went to see it. Betting on horses is another kind of poison, and Mr. Wiley was just the sort to take a strong inoculation. He did.

College forgot him again, and the race course began to know him frequently and intimately. Cooley, in ratio, began to see him less; supper after the races, the theater, and a few things up-town after the show, you know. The trail of the man who goes racing is almost as plain as the broad track over which his favorites run. There are rarebits and champagne corks and other troubles strung through it—and most of the racing man's days are nights. It's a merry life for the man with the long bank account and no particular responsibilities, but it is not well for the round-ing-out young man, whose means are inside a close limit and furnished for other purposes.

Mr. Wiley Carey was not adapted to racing; there was too much elation over the winnings and too many mad moods over the losings. Cooley could tell best of these variations of temper. Waiting up nights, he saw Mr. Wiley make two kinds of home entrances. One was sparkling, iridescent, vainglorious, like the peacock's strut; Mr. Wiley had picked his horses well and the bookmakers have regretted him. Other nights he came slowly in, with his hands shoved deep in his pockets and a black frown on his brow; the bookmakers smiled. Those nights he nodded no greeting to the boy, but submitted to being undressed, and went sullenly to bed. Cooley saw and interpreted these signs. There were more black moods than seemed to be balanced by the glad nights, and Cooley worried.

"Mistah Wiley sho' ain' doin' ez well ez he wuz onct. Race horses is all right and colliges is all right, but they don't mix hyah in New York enny places have ceased to wonder at the loud demand for veal. They know that when the summer girl returns from her sea bath, walk or drive, her first thought is for a veal outlet that shall preserve the delicacy of her complexion. The proper procedure is to have the cutlets shaved into very thin slices. These raw slices must then be carefully laid all over the face, and lightly kept in place by passing narrow ribbon or tape over them. The result is not becoming, but that is unimportant. The victim then retires to a perfectly darkened room and lies down for at least half an hour. When the veal becomes warm by contact with the face, it should be turned over and again applied.

When the face has ceased to burn the veal may be removed and the face gently washed with elder flower water. The face should not be again exposed to the sun the same day, and no soap should be used on it for a day or two. When these precautions are observed the veal cure is guaranteed to be effective.—Philadelphia Times.

VEAL CURE FOR SUNBURN.

Damaged Complexions May Be Restored by Veal Cutlet Applications.

The cry which rises annually from every seashore, country and mountain resort in the land this year met with a new response. Pasty lotions of more or less harmless properties are no longer advocated as a cure for sunburn. Complexions which have been given a crimson tinge by too long exposure to summer suns now find their speediest cure in a veal cutlet. The "veal cure," as it is called, has leaped into a popularity which indicates that it is more than ordinarily potent.

Butchers at the summer watering-places have ceased to wonder at the loud demand for veal. They know that when the summer girl returns from her sea bath, walk or drive, her first thought is for a veal outlet that shall preserve the delicacy of her complexion. The proper procedure is to have the cutlets shaved into very thin slices. These raw slices must then be carefully laid all over the face, and lightly kept in place by passing narrow ribbon or tape over them. The result is not becoming, but that is unimportant. The victim then retires to a perfectly darkened room and lies down for at least half an hour. When the veal becomes warm by contact with the face, it should be turned over and again applied.
