THE CONGRESSIONAL NOMINATION.

The nomination of Capt. Allen, of Frankfort, as the democratic candidate from the 8th district for Congress is generally conceded; in fact it would seem that he would receive it by acclamation. The entire party could unite on him and would, and the true strength of the party in the district would be brought out. While the district is gerrymandered for the republican party, Allen will come as near winning as any man in it. The attempt to foust Cheadle upon the party was done once, but cannot be repeated. The party knows there is not a drop of democratic blood in him, that his instincts and inclinations have always been republican, that if again nominated the same result as that of two years ago will occur. A man that spent, as he alleged, "four years in the army shooting at democrats," is indeed a wonderfully changed man to be desiring the votes now of members of that party. Let him go back to his republican friends where he naturally belongs. He cannot by his demagoguery expect to fool a respectable majority of democrats into voting for him for Congress.

SILENCED THEM.

The late democratic State convention did a very commendable act in passing by its nominations a number of old stereotypes such as Fanning, Reley, King and others who are always bobbing up for some office at the hands of the party and have been for twenty years past. There are thousands of democrats throughout the State who have done as much or more for the party than ever any of these men have, but who are not constantly importuning the party for some soft job. These men hang around Indianapolis from year to year hoping to catch some office, and their importunities never cease. The convention did a good act for these perpetual office-seekers. The only thing to be feared is that they will bob up again in two years, and the convention will have to repeat the job.

The sentiment that it is necessary to re-nominate the old State ticket every time it is defeated seemed to have little thought with the delegates at the last week's State democratic convention. It is right that it should. There is little sense nor reason in re-nominating a lot of old time office seekers where they repeatedly fail to win just simply to please them and their friends.

POLITICS RULES.

With our little Governor of Indiana politics rules in the appointments mostly made by him in regiments sent to the war. Fitness is a secondary matter. His appointment of a Colonel for the new regiment to be recruited by the State (the 161st) is an instance of this. Vic, Baccus, an experienced military man, was an applicant for the Colonelcy backed by good strong references. This did not meet the views of our little Governor. A man named Durban, of Anderson, was selected by Mount. He had no particular fitness for the place, but is a republican politician and friend of ex-President Harrison. Baccus unfortunately was a democrat and that settled it. Our little narrow contracted Governor has made many similar appointments, and has brought down upon him the anathemas of many of his own party by just such acts as this. He is constructed on a very narrow foundation in most matters it is seen, and the fact that he has no further political aspirations is evidently proper. The public will have had enough of him by the time his term of four years of Governor has expired.

UNSATISFACTORY NEWS.

There has never been a great conflict nor an affair of great interest where news relating to it were more unsatisfactory, more unreliable and more difficult to find out the truth about than the present Spanish-American conflict. The statements of one day are all denied the next, and one rarely knows what to believe in any of the reports coming from the various centers for collecting information relating to the war. We are tolerably certain that Dewey demolished the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila, but about the truth of anything else we know but little. One lays down the daily paper with disgust now, because he knows not whether it is facts or fiction that he has been reading about. There is entirely too much so-called "enterprise" used in the collection of news regarding the war, and not enough regard paid toward its reliability and correctness in detail. The large daily publications may be reaping a greater pecuniary reward by their system of publishing everything regardless of truthfulness, but like an individual known as a perpetual liar their character and standing always remains bad.

THE PROHIS.

The prohibition party of the State has nominated as usual a State ticket. It is somewhat strange that these people should continue to go through this monkey performance every year there are State offices to elect, knowing as they do that there is no show whatever for them for the offices and that they never can expect their principles to predominate nor to get even a fourth of the popular vote for their ticket. The prohibs in following up this custom feel probably as did old Abe Lincoln when asked one time why he permitted his wife to bound him so frequently with her slipper, "It does no harm," he replied, "and seems to afford her so much amusement."

SINCE the war began Mark Hanna, who before was very much spoken of, seems to have dropped almost to obscurity. Politicians frequently stir up strife, but rarely aid in suppressing it. Hannah is a small figure just now.

A BOON TO THE WORLD.

Would Be Free Coinage of Silver In This Country.

A VALUABLE COINAGE PRIMER.

Some Plain Facts About Value—Elucidation of the Terms Supply and Demand. Factors Which Determine the Value of Money—Quantity of Coin Needed.

With a greater number of coins prices will be higher, and the increase of prices will check the production of precious metals. The value of a thing is what it will exchange for. The value of money is what money will exchange for on its purchasing power. The value of money is inversely to general prices, falling as they rise and rising as they fall. If prices are low, money will buy much more of other things and is of high value; if prices are high, it will buy little of other things and is of low value, writes F. A. Bensberg in The Mississippi Valley Democrat. Now the general theory of value, it appears, and the proximate conditions which determine it is the equation between supply and demand, and this is clearly the case with reference to money. The terms supply and demand need, however, some elucidation. Let us consider what is meant by the supply of or the demand for money. The supply of a commodity means the quantity of it which is offered for sale. But in what shape does the sale of money take place? By being offered for goods. The supply of money, then, is the quantity of it which people are wanting to lay out, or, to put the point more concisely, it is all the money in circulation at the time. Again, to take the case of demand. The demand for a commodity is the purchasing power offered for it. Demand, in the special case of money, consists of all the goods offered for sale. There is, however, a peculiar feature in the case of money which arises from its position as the medium of exchange—viz, that money is, so to say, in a constant state of supply and demand, since its principal service is to act as the means of purchasing commodities. From this it follows that the factors which determine the value of money within a given time are: First, the amount of money in circulation, and, second, the amount of goods to be sold.

The next question which arises is, What quantity of money does a nation (world) require? What amount of the circulating medium is necessary for the proper making of the industrial organism? To this puzzling problem the earlier economist gave answers in the shape of definite formulas. Thus Sir W. Petty was of the opinion that the amount of coin required by a country was one-half of the rent of the land, one-quarter the amount of building rent and one-fifty-second part of the annual wages of labor. Modern statisticians, however, decline to attempt a quantitative answer and content themselves with indicating conditions which the problem involves. In fact, we must first examine the work which money has to perform, and this depends upon several conditions. The first of these is the population. Other things being equal, twice as many people will want twice as much money. The second is the amount of transactions, for, if the amount of business done is double, the amount of money must be also double. Another factor which must be estimated is the extent of hoarding, for all the money hoarded is withdrawn from circulation, and increases the total amount needed.

Silver and gold are only suitable materials for forming the principal currency, as they do not deteriorate by being kept. Their firm and compact texture makes them difficult to wear. Their cost of production is so considerable that they possess great value in small bulk, and their identity is perfect. The possession of both of these metals of all the qualities needed for money is more briefly but forcibly put by Cantillon when he says that silver and gold are of small volume, of equal goodness, easy of transport, dividable without loss, easily guarded, beautiful and brilliant and durable almost to eternity.

Why 16 to 1? Because at 16 to 1 the world's supply of silver and gold is very near equal, and gold, made to share the burden with silver, will fall in price the world over to this ratio, which will be the true measure of values. The world's supply of money is not sufficient to meet the demand, and therefore its value has doubled within the last 25 years. The law of supply and demand applies to money with greater force than to anything else, for the reason that the demand for or the supply of money affects all products of labor and therefore labor itself. The increased purchasing power of money has not affected the value of stocks and bonds to the extent it has labor, for the reason that although the earning power of stocks and bonds is very near one-half this one-half will buy just as much of the products of labor as the whole world would have bought in 1873, when the world's supply of money was $6,500,000,000 silver and gold, very near an equal amount of each, good the world over at 16 to 1. One hundred million people used this money as the measure of values, that is $6.50 per capita. Today 1,350,000,000 people use gold as the measure of values, and there is only $4,000,000,000 in gold in the world, that is $3.25 per capita, and any article which sold 25 years ago for $6.50 can be bought today, with one or two exceptions, for $3.25. The gold standard means a steady, constant and indefinite increase in the purchasing power of money—that is, falling prices. With a greater number of coins prices will be higher, and increased prices will check the production of precious metals. The only way to get a greater number of coins is to open the United States mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1, which would be a boon to the world.
