are not more deadly than the millions of disease germs that are floating in the air we breathe and in the water we drink—germs of typhoid fever, malaria, consumption. Compared to a disease germ, a rattlesnake is a gentleman. He is a fair fighter. He tells you to look out. He rattles before he strikes. You have a chance to fight or run. The disease germ sneaks in. It comes while you are sleeping. It gains an entrance to the blood. It propagates there. It multiplies. In a few hours, or days, your blood is full of its children—millions of them. They go all over your body seeking a weak spot. They don't rattle—they strike. You feel listless, nervous, sluggish, feverish, and maybe you're flat on your back before you really know there is anything the matter.

The only way to keep out disease germs—to keep from being sick—is to keep your blood pure and rich, and your liver active and healthy.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the greatest tonic in the world, will do it.

Charles H. Sergeant, of Plain City, Madison Co., Ohio, writes: "During the summer and fall of 1871 I became all run-down and was out of order and strength. I was ordered to Dr. Pierce for advice. He said I had general debility, and advised Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Since I stopped taking it about one month ago, I have been able to work easily of any kind, and have been able to work easily. My appetite is good. I can eat three square meals a day, and I do not feel that miserable burning in the stomach after eating. My blood and nerves are in good shape."

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

Life of the Naval Apprentice—Making Steel Pens—Guards Set by Animals.

"Apprentices of the United States Navy" is the title of an article in St. Nicholas. Almost every boy by this time knows of battleships and cruisers, of torpedoes and torpedo boats and of the gallant officers and jolly Jack Tars who man the ships. But it is safe to say that there are few indeed who have ever heard of the young naval apprentice, the work which he has to do and what his chances are for the future. It is enough at present to say that he is an enlisted boy who by means of a great deal of drill and training develops gradually into a most efficient and useful man on board of our modern ships.

Although the apprentice can never hope to become a commissioned officer, there are many positions of trust and honor in the service that are open to him if he but applies himself to the tasks assigned to him day by day and is awake to the opportunities that are sure to turn up for him.

The boys at the training station truly may be said to live in a little world of their own, for they do not need to go outside of their own circle to find any of the needs of life. At certain hours of the day they form a well regulated school, in which they are taught all the elements of science, English and mathematics—enough to enable them to understand thoroughly and to handle intelligently the various fittings and armament of a modern man-of-war.

Well informed and thoroughly practical officers are stationed there to instruct the apprentices in all the drills and maneuvers used by seamen afloat and ashore, including infantry, light artillery, seamanship in all its forms, both theoretical and practical, the several kinds of signaling used in the service, the handling of boats under steam, oars and sails, and the use of sword and gun in the arts of fencing and of bayonet exercise.

A chaplain in the navy is detailed regularly for duty among the boys and to look after them in any way he may think most conducive to their highest moral improvement. Every Sunday the boys are assembled on deck to join in a regular church worship, presided over by the chaplain, and it is a most interesting sight to see several hundred boys of tender age, all in the same blue uniform, joining heartily in the service. Those with voices worthy of any cultivation are assigned to the choir, and they enjoy this honor quite as much as any of the several privileges that fall to their lot. At certain other times, in the evenings, during recreation periods, they are permitted to assemble for any kind of innocent amusement, and one of the most popular pastimes among them seems to be dancing.

Every spring and summer the apprentices are taken aboard some of the older vessels of the navy and are sent abroad for a cruise, during which, under efficient officers, they are taught the full duties of seamen afloat. All the theory of seamanship and gunnery is then reduced to practice, and the apprentices are put through the evolutions of furling, reefing and loosing sail, of abandoning ship and of aiming and firing the guns on board, antiquated though they may be.

Making Steel Pens.

Briefly described, steel pens are made as follows: First the steel is rolled into big sheets and then cut into strips about three inches in width. The strips are heated to a bright red and are then allowed to cool gradually, which anneals them.

They are next rolled to the necessary thinness and are cut into blank pens, and the pens, while flat, are usually stamped with the brand or name of the manufacturer.

To shape the pens is the next process. The rounding makes them hold the ink and distribute it more gradually and evenly than could be done if they were flat. To harden them they are heated to a cherry red and then suddenly cooled. This not only hardens them, but makes them elastic. The polishing, slitting, pointing and finishing come next, and then they are ready for use. The little holes in the pens at the end of the slits serve to make them more elastic and to facilitate the flow of the ink.

It is said that more steel is now used in the manufacture of pens than in that of swords. It is even claimed that the metal annually used in their manufacture weighs more than all the metal used in the manufacture of war implements. If this be true, much force is added to the time honored saying that "the pen is mightier than the sword."

Guards Set by Animals.

It is well known that many animals appoint one or more of their number to act as sentinels to guard against surprise while the rest are asleep or feeding or at play. Among the animals—using the word in its widest sense—that are thus prudent may be named the following: Wasps, ants, chamois and other antelopes, prairie dogs, wild horses, rooks, swans, Australian cockatoos, zebras, quails, certain monkeys, flamingoes, New Zealand silver eyes, shags and other birds, marmots, mouflon and other sheep, seals, African wild cattle, buanacos, elephants, etc.

Perhaps the best known of these are the prairie dogs, who burrow their homes in the earth in little villages, with regular streets and everything. All around these villages, bolt upright, sit wise little dogs to keep a lookout while the others sun themselves at the doors of their burrows or play. Let a strange animal or a man appear and one of the little sentries at once bark, and in another instant there is a twinkling of heels and not a prairie dog is to be seen until the danger is past.
