THIS WILL EXPLAIN

TO YOU WHY A

FAVORITE

BASE BURNER

Will produce as much heat with 2½ tons of coal as others will with from four to five tons.

THESE Diagrams make very plain some of the advantages in the Favorite Base Burner as compared with others. Notice how the heat is distributed through the flues in the bottom—it all comes to the front through the side bottom flues and then passes back through the center flue; this equally distributes the heat over the bottom. The sides of the flues and ash pit each being in one piece, make the entire sides from the top of the ash pit to the leg base radiating surface. See the hollow projecting pockets in the bottom to which the flue strips are attached; these in connection with the deep pocket around the outer edge of this bottom greatly increases the radiating surface and the strength of the bottom. Notice the strength of the check draft register at the rear of the ash box, it is also made so the pan cannot shut it off, and is located where it cannot burn out and bind from heat. See how clean the stove is made around the top of the ash pan and how the ash chutes project over the pan and how substantial the grate rests are made.

This cut also illustrates the surface to which the ash pit door is fitted which is finished with milling machinery, and the door is fitted with planing machinery, which is the most perfect process known for fitting surfaces. No other stove is made with these features named.

HERE'S THE DIFFERENCE ORDINARY DOUBLE FLUE, AND FAVORITE TRIPLE FLUE BASE BURNER COMPARED.

WAY

These two Diagrams show Two Different Kinds of Two-Flue Construction, as Made in Other Base Burners.

In this style of flue construction is made of bottom near the floor is lost. All the heat from the radiating surface of the bottom is circulated over the floor, much of it being drawn up through circulating flue in center of bottom, making a poor floor heater. One corner of the side bottom, where heat first passes, is heated much hotter than the other parts, the heat not being equally distributed over the flues, and in this construction there are four direct radiating surfaces to the back flues.

This style of flue construction is made in most base burners. There are but four surfaces to the back flues radiating heat directly into the room. One corner of back and one side of bottom, where heat first passes, are heated much hotter than the other parts, the heat not being equally distributed over the flues, and the circulating flues are also supplied with air from the heated space under the leg base.
