One of the candidates who was defeated in the primary election last Saturday today expressed the opinion that the evangelists would have to work in Wells county all the rest of the winter and also next summer in order to convert all of the liars. He evidently did not get the votes of all who gave him promise.—Bluffton News.

When W. H. Eichhorn, attorney for Dr. Landfair was in Indianapolis Tuesday he met with the members of the state medical board and exacted from them the promise that they would pay this city a visit in the near future and find how the feeling is here regarding the reinstating of the Bluffton doctor as a practicing physician.—Bluffton Banner.

Sam Stout, custodian of the county court house, has received verbal orders from the county commissioners to put forth every effort possible in stopping the "booze" drinking in the corridors of the building. This has become a great habit with the pint and quart fiends of the city and unless ceased at once arrests will be made.—Bluffton Banner.

John Moran, who went to Indianapolis to take part in the oral arguments in the case of Glendening vs. Stahley in the appellate court Tuesday, remained until yesterday to hear the arguments in the three-mile road law case, which came up yesterday in the supreme court. The Glendening-Stahley case was sent up to the supreme court, the appellate court deciding that it had no jurisdiction in the matter.

SLIPPED IN RIVER.

While walking along the St. Marys river in the north part of the city this morning Harry Millet had the misfortune to slip in and get a right good soaking. Fred Delininger, who was with him at the time, ran to the rescue and got him out before he was wet through and through. The river is somewhat swollen on account of the recent rains and the boys had a good time before they were on safe shore again.

Millet and "The Angelus."

It was only after long years of struggle and dire poverty, through which Millet was consoled and supported by his wife, that the peasant painter was able to take the three roomed cottage at Barbizon and "try to do something really good." It was then that he began to paint that most beautiful "poem of poverty," "The Angelus," which is today one of the most valuable pictures in the world. Again and again he threw aside the picture in despair of ever finishing it to his satisfaction, and as often his wife replaced it on the easel and induced him to continue.

On one occasion he was so incensed at not being able to produce a certain effect that he seized a knife and would have destroyed the canvas and ended the matter once for all had not his wife fortunately seized his hand and induced him to give the picture another trial. Thus it was that at last "The Angelus" found a place on the walls of the Louvre. The success it won encouraged Millet to paint many more pictures and thus place himself among the immortals in art.

Masquerading in the Past.

In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries Venice set the fashion in all matters of amusement and was a sort of combination of our Monte Carlo and Paris. Throughout the eighteenth century the Venetians were seized with a perfect mania for masquerading and gambling. Paris and London followed suit, and the two most popular amusements, both public and private, were masquerades and gambling saloons.

People not only wore their masks or visors at balls, but in the mall and the parks and the theaters. At length it was given to such a pass that when a police raid was made on a certain low dancing place in Soho and an order was given for every one to unmask what was the amazement of the police to find that at least a third of the company consisted of ladies and gentlemen of the highest aristocracy, some of whom had even brought their daughters.—London Saturday Review.

The Judges' Ride.

Customs change slowly with the lawyers, but the procession through the streets at the reopening of the law courts was not always the casual affair it is now. Until the middle of the sixteenth century the "judges' ride" to Westminster hall was quite an imposing spectacle, all the legal dignitaries were mounted on mules, like bishops and abbots on a pilgrimage.

Mules presently gave place to horses, which in turn were abandoned for coaches. The last procession on horseback took place in the time of Charles II, and was then regarded as an interesting revival. It was not greatly appreciated, however, by the judges themselves, who found their efforts to remain in the saddle far from conducive to a dignified appearance, and before the judges' end one of their number, Lord Twisdon, had the misfortune to be thrown in the mud.—Westminster Gazette.

INJURIES ARE SERIOUS.

Noah Loch has received word from his wife, who was called Monday to Sayeed on account of the injury received in a fall by their daughter, Arby, wife of Grover Hoffman, stating that her injury was even more serious than at first thought. Instead of a dislocated hip, as thought at first, the accident resulted in a dislocation of a part of the spinal column. Absolute quiet for four days and then confinement to her bed for weeks at the least, is a part of rigid treatment in store for Mrs. Loch. She is getting along well, and while she has the best of nature take her course.
