Having tarried in Indiana long enough to put forth the flamboyant statement that he will carry the state by "50,000 majority," Senator Beveridge then hiked out for the "New Hampshire hills." Mr. Beveridge does not stay long at a time in Indiana. When congress is in session he has an official excuse for being in Washington. When congress is not in session he has to go to the "Maine woods" or the "Atlantic coast" or the "New Hampshire hills" to recuperate from his arduous labors. He cannot recuperate in Indiana—not with Jim Watson, ex-Senator Hemenway, ex-Governor Durbin, ex-Vice President Fairbanks and Joe Kealing about. For one reason or another—usually another—the "senior senator" does not stay in Indiana long enough to become used to the climate. After the fourth of next March it will not matter much where Mr. Beveridge lives.

The chief Beveridge organ in Indiana is the Indianapolis Star. The Star is in the hands of a receiver while a quarrel is being adjusted, but the ownership of the paper, from latest accounts, rests between that eminent Wallstreeter, Dan Reed, of New York, and that eminent street railway magnate, J. C. Shafer, of Chicago. At any rate the Star is controlled by Beveridge and it sneers voluminously at the other republican faction. One of its latest sneers is as follows:

"It may be learned from certain of our contemporaries that, while the Beveridge camp in Indiana is delighted with the announcement of Roosevelt's coming, in other quarters, 'friendly to Taft,' the news is received with symptoms of alarm. * * All there is to this false and ridiculous cry of alarm consists of personal and factional opposition to Senator Beveridge. These worthies are not animated so much by passionate devotion to President Taft, for most of them opposed him at Chicago in 1908."

And there was more to the same effect and to the further effect that a republican legislature ought to be elected so that Beveridge could be sent back to the senate to support Taft's administration, which is rather remarkable. If there is any honesty and straightforwardness in the Beveridge candidacy his friends and newspaper organs are taking great pains to conceal the fact.

THE LACROIX'S

Will Entertain Large Audiences at the Crystal.

The La Croix's, two high class aerial and trapeze artists, will entertain the patrons of the Crystal air-dome tonight. Also singing, dancing and monologue. In addition to this there will be an entire change of program in motion pictures. Something doing every minute of the time at the Crystal tonight, and if you are one of the live ones, you'll be "Johnny-on-the-spot" tonight. Same old price.

REV. WATTS WANTS THE JOB.

Rev. I. P. Watts of Winchester while visiting relatives in Hartford City, made it known that he is a candidate for the republican congressional nomination in this district. According to the Hartford City Times-Gazette, Mr. Watts would take the nomination and go on the stump and try to be elected but he is not disposed to get out and make a fight for the nomination, and that he is assured a solid delegation from Randolph, his home county, and has many warm friends in other counties in the district.

LA DELLE AT THE STAR FRIDAY.

John Stoneburner, manager of the Star theater, has arranged a special program for Friday evening that will no doubt pack his air-dome. At that time he will have a special act by La Delle, the well-known magician, all new act, up to the minute, and sure to please, and think of it—the price is a nickel. It's your fault if you don't see this big show.

Garden flowers, with all their fragrance and beauty of coloring, combined to make the floral decorations of the home most lovely at the shower given Wednesday afternoon by Mrs. Fred Heuer at her home on West Monroe street for Miss Nellie Schrock. Sweet peas in many vases on stands and pedestals were the floral keynote of the living room, while bowls of nasturtiums were used in the parlor and potted ferns and growing plants added their beauty to all the rooms. The guests numbered thirty of the most intimate friends of the bride. After the informal mingling, during which the busy hum of conversation prevailed, Mrs. Heuer brought forth a polished oak box marked "recipes," from which she drew forth ruled cards, giving one to each guest, with the request that she write thereon her favorite recipe, with her autograph. These were then collected and given to Miss Schrock to read, and what was most wonderful no two were alike. There were "true and tried" recipes for cake, bread, jellies, candies, meats, sauces, pastry and every department of cooking, and when filed away in the little box—each in its own department—made a most acceptable gift for the bride-to-be, with its friendly memories that will live in the years to come. The "shower" was carefully hidden away until later, and when the portiere at the entrance to the dining room was drawn, and the electric lights therein turned on, they sparkled on a most beautiful scene, all in green and white, cool and inviting colors. At the farthest end of the room, in front of the wide-bowed window, stood a sheen case, each shelf lined with white tissue and bearing dainty pots of jellies and jams, cans of fruit of all kinds—and "serves and—everything good made from fruit. Over the shelves was suspended a white parasol, from which to points in the bowed window and the corners of the room were draped white and green crepe paper streamers. Sprays of smilax adorned the chandeliers and a potted dainty green vine formed the centerpiece of the table. Near the case was placed a chair adorned with a bow of green and white, this place of honor being delegated to the bride-to-be, while she opened gifts, which were daintily tied in white and green tissue, and read therefrom the expressions and best wishes of the donors, many of which were expressed in original and humorous little verses. Luncheon was served in two courses, bearing out the color scheme of white and green in the dainty sandwiches, cooling salads, ices and confections, and the sweet peas, given as favors. The hostess was assisted in serving by the Misses Helen Niblick, Bessie Boyers and Jean Lutz. Out of town guests were Mrs. Otto Haubold of Evanston, Ill., and Mrs. Frank Christen of Chicago.

One of the very happiest Sunday school class picnics was that enjoyed at Maple Grove park last evening from 4 to 7 by the pupils of Miss Margaret Mills, accompanied by Miss Winnie Burke, who assisted the teacher in caring for the children and arranging the delightful round of pleasures, including the picnic supper. The party included Helen Walters, Gladys Sampson, Lucile Sampson, Helen Dilley, Mary Aurand, Lorine Parr, Josephine Meyers, Dolores Ballenger, Irene DeWitt, Beatrice Baxter, Mildred Yager, Thelma Auth, Lena Dillinger, Esther Bowers, Myrtle Copcock, Bertha Fledderjohann, Victoria Mills and Mary Burke.

The boys of the Reformed Sunday school class taught by Miss Susie Mayer met Wednesday evening with Elmer and George Miller and organized the Sunshine club which will meet every Tuesday evening, the collection to be used for the building fund for the new church. Following the organization the boys indulged in a peanut hunt and other amusements, music and refreshments, enjoying one of the best evenings of their lives.

Norbert Holthouse was host at a picnic given at Maple Grove park to day for his cousin, Miss Beatrice

Lynch, of Jonesboro, Ark. The party left on the 10 o'clock car for the shady grove, where all the amusements of this famous resort were called into evidence in providing a good time. Hampers of good things were taken along from which dinner at noon was spread. Guests were Leona

Bosse, Jeanette Kinney, Agnes Colchin,

Matilda Berling, Margaret Smith,

Laurine Keller, Mary Starost,

Kate Holthouse, Frances Mougey,

The Phi Delta Kappa dance at Maple Grove park last evening was well attended. Large numbers came and went on all the regular interurban

cars, and an extra, put on at 11:30, brought the remaining numbers to the city.

Mrs. A. Holthouse and daughters,

Mrs. B. G. Lynch, of Jonesboro, Ark.,

and Sister Antonia, of Little Rock,

Ark., were guests of honor at a dinner given today noon by Mrs. E. X.

Ehinger, and one this evening by Mrs.

men is preparing for an ice cream socellent music will be provided during meet with the class for the study of the lesson.
