VISITS INDIANA

to be felt by both standpatter and progressive, just as in 1894 the democrats suffered all over the country regardless of the attitude of the candidates upon the questions on which the democrats differed. We are counting on Indiana to increase her democratic representation in congress, although she did exceptionally well two years ago. And we are relying upon the election of Kern. I feel an especial interest in him, not only because of his personal character and lovable qualifications but because he has been a staunch supporter in my three campaigns and was my associate on the ticket in the last campaign. I know him intimately and know that he is sound upon questions on which he will have to act as senator. He is a pioneer in matters of reform. There is no reason why any democrat should vote against Mr. Kern and he ought to receive the support of a multitude of republicans. Democrats ought to vote for him because he is the living embodiment of democrat ideas and ideals. The progressive republican ought to vote for him on the ground of the fact that he was fighting for progressive legislation before the need of it. Standpatter republicans ought to vote for him on the ground that democratic policies should be entrusted to democrats rather than to those republicans who are just beginning to admit the righteousness of the democratic position. There is a sense of justice which is offended by the argument advanced by Senator Beveridge, namely: That the new recruit should be honored above the veteran. After giving Senator Beveridge all the credit that his friends can claim for him, it must be admitted that the good things for which he stands are not new and that wherever he differs from the democratic position his position is not good. Senator Beveridge must either class himself with those who approve of President Taft's policies or with those who oppose them. If he approves of President Taft's policies he ought not to expect the support of either democrats or progressive republicans. If he is opposed President Taft's policies, he ought to give Mr. Kern credit for seeing the president's errors and warning the people against them.
