THE PARCELS POST.

It was the gentle postmaster That scrupled not to boast Of how with joy he'd do his share To boom the parcels post. But when the first installment came His head began to spin And sobs convulsant shook his frame, For this is what came in:

Tomatoes, bricks
And hockey sticks,
Green beans and wooden legs,
Bricklayers' hods
And fishing rods.
Stovepipes and scrambled eggs,
Potatoes, shirts
And hobble skirts,
Whereat—well on the dead,
We'd rather not
Report just what
That poor postmaster said.

It was the letter carrier Who, ready for his route, Dreamed not of what he'd have to bear When once he started out. They showed him parcels mountains high, Enough his back to break. He fainted with a piteous cry. Here's what he had to take:

Ice cream in cones
And paving stones,
Typewriters and mince pies,
Young onion sets
And castanets,
And birds of Paradise;
Old rye in flasks
And baseball masks—
Oh, let us be excused
From quoting here
The words severe
That letter carrier used.

It is the genial populace That feels itself in luck. The chance it happens to embrace To mail all kinds of truck. Dear Uncle Sam! He never fails The multitude to please. That's why he lets us load the mails With odds and ends like these:

Shotguns and clams,
Westphalia hams.
Beer kegs and oyster stews,
Bulldogs and goats
And overcoats.
Rolled oats and billiard cues,
Sour krout and skates
And paperweights—
'Tis thus the mails we'll choke
Till mail men all,
Forced to the wall,
Throw up their hands and croak.
