HOOSIER POLITICS

Republicans Are Anxious to Land Reorganization Convention at Indianapolis

IS VERY IMPORTANT

Taggart Talk is Plentiful—
Vice-president Marshall's
Visit Talked About.

(United Press Service)

Indianapolis, Ind., June 11—(Special to Daily Democrat)—Indiana republicans are busily engaged pulling all the wires they can to land the coming reorganization convention of the national republican party for Indianapolis, that is to say, Indiana. And this city now seems to have the inside track, according to republican leaders here and in Washington.

The national executive committee of the republicans meets in Chattanooga or Detroit this fall to arrange for the convention. The choice of the city will be next in importance to the party issues likely to bob up at the committee's meeting. The convention is said to be favored for March, 1914.

If Indianapolis were to land the reorganization meeting of the republicans it would mark the second time in history that this city has harbored a national convention of one of the leading parties. In 1896 the sound money democrats met here and nominated Palmer and Buckner.

In this way the republicans are likely to figure in state politics for some time to come. But for several years past all political dope has been about the democrats in power. Today in democratic circles all the talk is about the coming appointments of Meredith Nicholson of Indianapolis and John Lamb of Terre Haute to diplomatic posts in the federal government. Nicholson, the novelist, came into political prominence recently by the enthusiastic manner in which he opposed Joseph E. Bell, democratic nominee for mayor, wrote letters against Bell and Bell replied in kind until the feeling between the two camps was pretty warm. John Lamb has never been pleased with Taggart, Ralston and the present administration crowd.

Therefore the gossip tends strongly to the belief that President Wilson, Vice President Marshall and Senators Kern and Shively are continuing in the role of not favoring the French Lick man's machine. This estimate of the situation is rather strengthened by the inactivity in the appointments sought for by Peter Kruger of South Bend and Reginald H. Sullivan of Indianapolis, two Taggart candidates for federal jobs.

"Yuh got to hand it to Tom," however, for going to Washington, sounding the alarm of the job-hunters, getting apparently a cordial reception from President Wilson and having the papers play him up big in the favorable spotlight of the administration. Later accounts of the meeting with the president put no "Welcome to Our City" aspect on it, however. These accounts relate that the meeting was accidental, and rather sought by Taggart than Secretary Tumulty. Nevertheless, Taggart today, as heretofore, has 'em all guessin'.

Considerable political significance was said to attach to Vice President Marshall's visit to Indianapolis Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Apparently he came only for the unveiling of the bust of Richard Dale Owen, commandant of the old Camp Morton here in the civil war, and noted for his kind treatment of Confederate prisoners. Marshall as governor first listened to the plans of southerners to commemorate Owen's kindness.

Governor Ralston and Vice President Marshall appeared on the same platform during the unveiling ceremonies. Their manner toward each other has always been cordial although popularly Marshall is credited with being slightly more progressive than Ralston. Marshall, however, said himself that he has been called everything from a reactionary Bourbon to an anarchist. What politics was fated during the visit of the vice president remains a secret with him and his conferees.
