Winter is coming, ho! ho! This was evident last night from all the signs—and they are many. In the first place the cold winds blew so fiercely that more than one uneasy slumberer was constrained to arise from his cot in the w.c. still hours of night and seek the chest where the winter supply of comforters and blankets had been put away snug and safe from the moths. This morning a wood fire blaze was crackling briskly on many a hearth. But the most convincing sign was manifest this morning at about 4:30 o'clock when the early shift of postoffice clerks pursued their shivering ways to the office to put up the morning's mail. The flock of wild geese flying southward came to their own from across the river where the flock had settled to rest their weary pinions in their long flight to warmer countries. And wild geese are said to be a sure sign in "dry weather."
