

IF J. OGDEN ARMOUR, ROGER SULLIVAN and JULIUS ROSENWALD the head of Sears & Roebuck, the Chicago millionaires who thought they could not afford to pay the prices charged for shoes in Chicago, would drop into our store we believe we could easily convince them we are still selling shoes that are a real saving to buy.

This is a good time for YOU to test the ability of this store to give extra values even in spite of the high prices.

The Ladies Aid of the Christian church met at the home of Mrs. Noah Mangold of First street Friday evening. It was to have bet at the home of Mrs. Osgood, but on account of the unsettled condition of her house occasioned by her leaving town, it was suggested that some one else take it in her stead. The had their meeting at usual and at the close, Mrs. Mangold announced that she would not serve refreshments this time as it was not her time to entertain, but instead they would take a long ride. Ready for the unexpected ride, they started on their journey. No one seemed to know just where they were bound for. Some thought Fort Wayne; others Portland and the farther they went the less idea they had of their destination. Finally, "I smell coffee," and the rattling of dishes was heard, still Mrs. Osgood had no idea of what was happening. Suddenly all machines stopped and her first thought was that they had tire trouble. Her mind was soon relieved when all landed in a delightfully cool woods and ten of the ladies proceeded to decorate the tables with white linen and greens, while the rest played games. All gathered around to enjoy the feast, which consisted of chicken, baked beans, potato salad, boiled eggs, five kinds of sandwiches, cheese, olives, beet pickles, three kinds of cake, two kinds of pie, and fruits. This was such a surprise to Mrs. Osgood that it was almost impossible for her to express her thanks and show her appreciation to the members of the Christian church. There was a large number present and a collection amounting to $20.85 was taken. On returning to the city they were invited to the home of Dr. Weaver where they spent a very sociable evening and were served with ice cream and cake.
