It is a well known fact that canned fruits and vegetables are sometimes spoiled because air gets into the can thus causing the bacteria to grow. A woman has worked out a system in which the cans are filled with carbon dioxide gas which kills the bacteria present and does no harm to the food. By the use of this idea she has preserved meats and milk for several years and the articles that housewives have the most trouble preserving yield readily and keep for two or three years.

An apparatus has been invented which prevents "listening in" on the telephone. The electric pulsations sent out are deformed so that they are unintelligible to all but the person to whom you are talking who has his instrument so arranged that it restores the waves to their natural form. The apparatus was invented by a French army engineer and has had several successful trials.
