SMALL TOWN FACTORIES:

Have the great industrial centers of the United States reached their maximum growth? Henry Ford believes that they have, that the time has come to break up the congestion of workers in large cities, and to get back to the small communities with industry. His theory is that the massing of industrial workers in a large city is bad for the country, and that anything which is bad for the country is, in the long run, bad for industry. He announces that he has demonstrated to his own satisfaction that industries can be taken to the people who live close to the soil, and that he expects to expand his own industrial activities along this line.

The Ford idea is that instead of housing a large industry in a single large plant or group of plants in a city it can be broken up into small units, and each unit can be successfully operated in a small town, where it will provide employment for the class of people who leave small towns for the industrial opportunities of the cities, and also part-time employment for farmers who are now unable to make a satisfactory living on small farms. The water power available in many small towns will provide the power for the factory, and the factory will provide power for the town's utilities. In this way, Ford believes, the towns can be made attractive enough to hold the workers, and the whole scheme will save them from the unwholesome life in packed cities.

The small town as a potential industrial asset has already been utilized to some extent by manufacturers, chiefly those seeking relief from labor troubles in the cities, and in some industries the truth of Ford's contention has been proved. In such industries as Ford's, where there is an enormous production of standardized parts, the only difficulty to be met is transportation, and Ford thinks that good roads and motor trucks will solve that problem. If so, the small town may again become the backbone of the United States.—Indianapolis News.

Every inch of space was taken at the gym last night, when Monroe and Decatur battled for the county championship. The Decatur girls won an easy victory and further established their claims for the best team in the state. The boys put up a terrific battle and the fans made it interesting by "rooting" from the side lines most earnestly. The boys teams are evenly matched, the locals doing the best passing while the Monroe lads excelled in basket throwing when they had the opportunity. The guarding of the locals saved the game. It was exciting, interesting but a friendly contest and the tournament which opens Friday will prove a real one, with six splendid county teams fighting for the honor of representing the county at the district tournament. It's good clean sport and deserving of the interest manifested.

The farmers institutes over this county this year are of unusual interest. The lecturers know whereof they speak and the subjects are those close to the hearts of those who produce from the soil. The attendance should be the best ever for we are sure every one who attends these meetings will be pleased and will profit from so doing. Even those who have graduated from the school of experience should attend for you may be able to give information to others and profit as well from the talks, for we are never too old to learn.

Decatur beat Geneva in basket ball, Geneva defeated Monroe at Monroe, Monroe beat Berne 142 to 2. Berne beat Decatur here, then Decatur gains a victory over Monroe—then we are expected to pick the best team and we have come to the conclusion that they are all good teams, fine boys and that Adams county can well be proud of every one of them. The sport is friendly though, exciting and the boys on the various teams are all good friends as they should be.
