Who Is the Gas Company?

Not the president, vice president or men who work at desks. The Company consists of thousands of working people who, with their hard-earned savings, have become shareholders. The officers and employees of the Company are merely doing their best to obtain fair profits for the stockholders who have shown their confidence by investing their money in this Company.

This Finicky March Weather

You never know where you stand, with the weather man springing so many surprises. That old house heating plant finds it impossible to be always equal to the occasion.

Fool the weather man! Have a Radiantfire Gas Heating Stove connected in the room you use most, or get a portable Gas Heating Stove for quick warmth in any room where there is a gas outlet. Then you can laugh at weather vagaries.

David Harum Tactics Have No Place In Modern Business

THE horse trading proclivities of the shrewd old Yankee have lost caste. They are boomerangs that hit hard on the come-back. They prove too costly to the perpetrator.

It used to be considered good business to trade a horse with the heavens for one that was sound in wind and limb. But business today is done on such a broad scale—every merchant and manufacturer has so long a list of patrons—that it would not do to have a reputation of "slipping something over."

The basis of modern business is honesty. Advertising has standardized almost every article you can buy. You know what to expect and what to pay. You don't have to bargain, and dicker and haggle to know that you are getting as good as you give.

That is why it pays to read advertisements and to buy advertised goods. A product's advertising is the best guarantee of its faithful performance and lasting usefulness or of its definite quality.

If you value constant satisfaction—if you want to get your full money's worth every time, read the advertisements. In them you will find much to save you money, time and energy.

Whether you want food, clothing, furniture or a toy for the children, the advertisements can help you.

To take advantage of an advertisement

is to get real value

WHAT IS A SOJA BEAN?

The Soy Bean—also called the Soja Bean and the Soya Bean and in North Carolina the 'Stock Pea' is a leguminous plant, a native of South Eastern Asia. It has been grown in India and Japan for more than 5000 years and in extent of uses and value is the most important legume grown in these countries. In commercial importance the soy bean stands a fair chance of displacing one of our important cereal crops since its varied and extensive uses throughout the world is now an established fact. In Japan these beans are used for food for both man and beast and right here in our own country the bean is growing in popularity and gaining prominence as a human food. An attempt to give full detail concerning the possibilities of these soy beans grown in Indiana soil would take much space, therefore the matter can receive only slight mention here but in order to give the reader an idea of the importance of the soy bean in our rotation in this section we want to name some of the various products now manufactured in the United States but as yet on a very small scale.

From the meal of the bean human food can be made such as breakfast food, flour macaroni and crackers and from the flour, bread cakes, muffins and biscuits of a delightful flavor it is said. From the oil it has been found that a good quality of butter substitutes lard substitutes and salad oils may be extracted at a very low cost. Other products such as soy sauce, boiled beans, baked beans, roasted beans, etc., are very palatable. The proof is in the eat and we have tried them many times on our own table.

This spring would be a very good time for the farmers of this section to give the Soy Bean a trial. Seed can be purchased cheaper this year than ever before. Good tested seed can be bought at from $2.50 to $2.75 per bushel in Decatur—a price that represents just about half what choice seed sold for in former seasons.

As a soil builder Soy Beans are equal to clover and as a hay or ensilage crop it has been found that they will produce from three to five tons per acre if cut when the beans are starting to form.

Any farmer wishing more information relative to planting and harvesting soy beans should write to the Bureau of Plant Industry, Washington, D. C., for Farmers Bulletin No. 886 and 973.

The beans grown on our place last year was of the Ita San variety. This variety ripens early enough to hog off with corn, and they are very hardy and prolific. The yield run about twenty bushels per acre and of a very fine quality. As yet no insect is present to damage the beans and they are more draught resistant, and less sensitive to an excess of moisture than corn.
