of the railroad strike and the presidential coal committee started its work of rationing coal.

The White House is confident of a settlement of the railroad strike some time next week.

While the coal strike is regarded as "still in the woods" administration officials are confident of averting a disastrous fuel famine even if the strike continue for some time.

Harding is sure that the public demand for fuel will have ample response.

"We shall have coal" it was confidently and emphatically stated at the White House.
