Registration Is Larger Than That of 1920

(United Press Service.) Indianapolis, Oct. 23.—Political war horses in Indiana sat back and wondered the other day when registration figures were announced. They are slightly larger than those of 1920, a presidential year. This is almost unheard of in an off year.

The only explanation offered was the fact that the organizations devoted most of their time to registration than to fire works.

Organization heads and dopesters, however did not worry much about an explanation. They have been active ever since the announcement making claims.

The Democrats point out that in most of the counties where decreases were shown, for there were some decreases, Harding had a majority in 1920. The Republicans parried with the fact that Harding had a plurality in most of the counties of Indiana and that in many where he had a plurality increases were shown.

Congressional campaigns are attracting perhaps more attention this year than usual. This is due to the fact that there appears to be a possibility in some districts that the election will be closer than usual.

The first time in many years the Democrats are making extravagant claims. They are going above the line marked by the National road across the center of the state, which has been considered by some the line of demarcation between Democratic and Republican district. Some of them are even laying claim to the Eighth.

The Republican will admit there is possibility of a close election and perhaps defeat, only in the Third district. This is the district now represented by James Dunbar, who declined to become a candidate again.
