RESIDENCE FOR TOWN OR FARM

This Imposing Structure Is Supplied With Many Rooms.

SQUARE HOUSE IS POPULAR

Roomy Veranda Extending Across Front of House Relieves Severity of Its Lines—Sleeping Porches Are Provided.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

A square house like this is always sure to win favorable consideration with many intending home owners. Particularly is this true of the design, where the severity of the square structure is broken in on by the fine, roomy veranda that extends across the front of the house and the fireplace chimney and the dining room bay which appear at one side. Then again, the little dormer is an aid, breaking in on the roof line as it does and cooling the upstairs through ventilation in the summer.

The dimensions of the house over all are 33 feet by 38 feet. There are 9 rooms, but if the downstairs breakfast porch and the two upstairs sleeping porches are taken into account, there are really three extra rooms—12 rooms in all.

The living room extends all across the front of the house, has light on three sides and a fireplace at one end. Separating it from the dining room are glass doors, giving a very spacious interior effect. The bay window makes the dining room a very attractive place indeed and a general effect of lightness is had from the breakfast porch onto which the dining room opens, the entering doors to which could be of glass. Therefore, since the kitchen likewise adjoins the breakfast porch, the latter could be made to act as headquarters for the kitchen work after the first meal of the day is over. There would be a view right through the house to the front—a little thing, but worth considering if the house is to be built on a farm. Passing friends and neighbors horses on the road offer glimpses of interest that lighten the day's task immensely. Or, again, the view of the road could be had by turning the design around, with the porch facing the road.

The washroom, naturally indispensable on the farm if the housewife is to keep her housework within bounds, adjoins the kitchen. It opens into a lavatory and there is in addition stationary wash tubs which do away with porch or basement washing inconvenience. The kitchen sink is right by the window, a place every woman would like the sink to be. There is a downstairs bedroom that opens off the hall, and from which the occupant can go upstairs or to the downstairs lavatory without traversing the living quarters, a connecting door to the lavatory being possible through the separating wall.

Upstairs are four bedrooms, bathroom and two sleeping porches. There is no reason why, in the case of a large family or overnight guests, the sleeping porches could not serve as bedrooms also, regardless of the season of the year. Screened in summer and fitted with windows in winter, they lend themselves admirably to guest or family use, and would still more, if built-in beds were used. Observe that there is closet room which would permit this. For that matter there is ample closet space throughout the house, upstairs and down.

The exterior of the house is so finished as to avoid any impression of monotony. There is weather-boarding and vertical striping for the first story and a few feet above it; then stucco, running with a smooth curve into the outward line of the cornice. This exterior finish is not arbitrary. Ordinary narrow siding could be used for the exterior, all the way up; or brick; or stone, if available. Boulders would make fine veranda posts and give distinction to the chimney and foundation.

This house calls for a spacious lawn before it to appear to the best advantage. Any farm house deserves a lawn before it, no matter how small. There are so many other places to put the vegetable garden.

FORM AN OPALESCENT HUE

Peculiarity Frequently Noticed in Globes of Electric Arc Due to Spheres of Silica.

A beautiful opalescence may sometimes be observed in the glass globes used to diffuse the light of the electric arc, particularly after such globes have been in use for a long time.

Close examination shows that the opalescence is due to the presence on the glass of minute spheres of silica, which have evidently been formed by volatilization from the glass under the influence of the electric arc. This effect is in accordance with the experiments of French scientists, whose electric furnaces have produced some surprising results.

The essential feature of the furnace is an electric arc of great intensity. When rock crystal, broken into fragments, is placed in the furnace it simply melts like so much ice, and in a few minutes the liquid thus formed begins to boil.

The vapor rising from the liquefied crystal is condensed into a little bluish-white cloud, from which tiny spheres of silica, glimmering with opalescent hues, are deposited. These spheres, as already remarked, are similar to those found on arc-light globes. The latter, of course, are the product of a very slow and gradual process, while in the electric furnace the volatilization is effected with rapidity.—Washington Star.

Wine Cellars Immense.

An idea of the size of the London wine vaults is conveyed by the fact that there are 24 miles of gangway running through them. Millwall, the largest granary in the port, with a capacity of 24,000 tons only holds enough grain to make London's bread for one week.

Indian shawl effects are noticed in negligees and lounging robes. They are colorful and lend themselves beautifully to artistic drapery.

New York, March 3.—Inflationary tendencies are growing according to the week-end trade reviews which tell of steadily increasing demand at rising prices.

Commodity averages in February scored a greater proportionate rise than in any months for several years and all indications point to a further progress in the same direction before a month.

In view of this foundation for a current uprush in the stock market practiced observers hold that the diversion of speculative interest into steel shares on an active scale could not be interpreted to indicate the end of themovement. Strength in United States Steel, Bethlehem and Republic and other leading independents will do more to stimulate public buying than an advance in any other groups. Steel's buoyancy on Friday was not without its influence on today's early dealings.
