MAH-JONG GAME A MID-WEST INVENTION

J. P. Babcock, a Hoosier, adds one more hoax to Indiana's long list; name doesn't mean anything in any language; inventor didn't dream of it becoming so popular.

There was once a gentleman who braved the perils of a dreaded Tibetan temple, where sounded sepulchral gongs and flamed sinister fires, to swipe for his collection a rare old an-hang-kwi vase of the Pori-lai dynasty. Now the foot of white man had never trod the sacred precincts of the Tibetan town, let alone the temple. The doom of death had been called down upon all persons and all objects of alien extraction or manufacture, by the native Zkung-whai-wahis, or priests and their so-hung-zhi-hu-hius, or assistants. Several thousand of them were flung in a terrible cordon about the walls of the town, for all the world as impenetrable as Michigan's line.

But nevertheless our hero slipped in, disguised as a shipment of bananas, knifed a priest or two, hit a few zo-hung-zhi-hu-hius over the head with less valuable pieces of vase, and made off with his life and the vase, stamped on bottom with the legend made by Tutwiler and Zischolz, South Bend, Indiana.

Indiana has been passing things off for what they are not for the past 50 years. Almost 40 years ago James Whitcomb Riley, with his tongue in his cheek, wrote a poem called "Leonanie" and passed it off as a hitherto unpublished lyric of Mr. Edgar Allen Poe. He got away with it. But back to our main story, to which we have been gently leading up in order that the shock will not kill anyone. It is the story of the latest Indiana escapade, if you will.

Mah-Jong—brace yourself—the ancient Chinese game, as redolent of the yellow kingdom as a cup of rice or a dish of tea or a gurgling zung from the lips of the Shanghai himself, was invented by Mr. J. P. Babcock, of Indiana, U. S. A. Do not tell this abruptly to your whitehaired aunt who has learned to speak mandarin and to eat chow-mien in order to throw Mah-Jong teas with the proper atmosphere. Let her ease into the tragic truth gently, or you'll have a cold relative on your sofa.

But it is the truth and, whereas, the truth often hurts, what's got to be has to, and the Los Angeles Times has a heartless reporter who interviewed this Mr. Babcock. Mr. Babcock recently got to that city from China, where he has spent, off and on, 10 years. Mr. Babcock does not look at all like Tully Marshall or Wallace

Beery in a villain role. He is a quiet, rather frightened young man, the counterpart of any normal graduate of an American university, a nice-looking blond man of about 30. To look at him, it is said, no one would believe he could have done such a thing, for there is not a trace of cruelty about the pleasing lips, no glint of torture in the frank, open eyes.

He speaks of Mah-Jong, it is true, with a certain sacred reluctance, but he does not shrink away and cry out when the chief of police suddenly shoots up the curtain and reveals to him a complete set of the intricate ivory on a table in the wall. He confesses but he does not break down.

Mr. Babcock has been in the merchandise business in China and has picked up many dialects there and learned many games. One of these latter was a Chinese game known in the Mandarin tongue as ma chiao. It was while playing this comparative innocent game one summer's evening that the horrible idea of vengeance flashed into Mr. Babcock's brain. And he invented Mah-Jong. The name doesn't mean anything in any language. It's sort of like Unedea or Zu-Zu. Which will probably bring a flush to the faces of those ladies who have pronounced it in front of a mirror with a Chinese grammar in their hands, in order to get the right "ong" sound.

"I had an idea of commercializing the thing as a novelty in America, but I never dreamed it would take on the aspect of the Browning club craze of 30 years ago," said Mr. Babcock. "I did not dream of all the accessories that Americans would add the mah-jong tables, cabinets, counters, etc. I have trouble keeping up with the game. The first edition of the rule book rapidly became outdated."

Mr. Babcock, dodging rate mah-jong Chinese game, came over on a ship in whose hold were 170 tons or so of ivory and bamboo in the shape of "Mah-Jong sets. Many ships have come before and many more are coming. The game has gone like wild-fire through America, Canada, and England. Mr. Babcock is in a fair way to get wealthy, for he receives royalties, too, from silks and seeds and socks and everything else that manufacturers wish to name "mah-jong brand," on account of the popularity of the old Mandarin name.

Mr. Babcock, dodging rate mah-jong widowers and flonizing mah-jong ladies who have reconciled themselves to the shock of the news that the ancient old Ta-Ming game is the work of a youthful Hoosier, says he wants to get back to China, where they play mah-jong.

Mah-jong is as Chinese as the forward pass. Kessinger's Mid-West Magazine.

IF RHEUMATIC BEGIN ON SALTS

Says We Must Keep Feet Dry, Avoid Exposure, Eat No Sweets

Stay off the damp ground, avoid exposure, keep feet dry, eat no sweets of any kind for a while, drink lots of water and above all take a spoonful of Jad Salts occasionally to help keep down uric and toxic acids.

Rheumatism is caused by poison toxins, called acids, which are generated in the bowels and absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine. The pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly, cold weather the skin pores are closed, thus forcing the kidneys to do double work; they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate this poison, which keeps accumulating and circulating through the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles, causing stiffness, soreness and pain, called rheumatism.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism.

San Antonio, Texas, March 3.—Mrs. Bertha Horchem, "stunt" performer with an airplane circus owned by her husband, was killed here during a circus Sunday when a wing of her plane broke while she was going into a nose dive. She was 1,500 feet above the ground when the wing broke. The plane crashed in the midst of a large crowd gathered to witness the circus. All spectators had rushed to safety, however. Horchem collapsed after seeing his wife's lifeless body removed from the wreckage.

Getting Ready for Tomorrow

THE average man, busy with his own affairs, has little time to consider the vast amount of anticipatory work necessary to maintain a high standard of service in the petroleum industry.

Just as the merchant buys straw hats in November and furs in early summer, so does the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) prepare in winter to supply you in summer with the gasoline and other petroleum products you may need.

Today, this Company is spending millions of dollars to purchase crude oil and to convert this oil into refined products so that next summer it may meet its obligations to supply the demand for gasoline and other petroleum products when pleasant weather makes motoring attractive and agricultural activities necessary.

Such an effort takes on greater significance when it is known that the production of crude has been checked sharply.

The American Petroleum Institute reports that from September 8 to December 15, 1923, the production of crude oil fell off 337,400 barrels per day.

This brings production to a point where it is 36,700 barrels less per day than the estimated daily average consumption.

The Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is preparing in advance to meet any demands which may be made upon it. It has a tremendous investment in storage facilities, located strategically throughout the territory it serves. By keeping this storage full it insures you an uninterrupted supply of petroleum products at all times.

To picture the enormous task confronting the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) it is only necessary to state that estimates made by the National Petroleum News indicate that the 1924 gasoline consumption will total 8 billion 236 million gallons.

With 31% of the automotive registrations of the country concentrated in the ten Middle Western States served by this Company, this estimate means that 2 billion 553 million gallons of gasoline will be required to supply these states.

Preparing now for the summer peak load is only another phase of the broad and comprehensive service rendered by this Company, which has gained the respect, confidence and esteem of the thirty million people of the Middle West.
