Daily Report Of Local And Foreign Markets

OPENING GRAIN REVIEW

Chicago, Oct. 29.—(United Press)—Heavy realizing weakened wheat in initial dealings on the board of trade today. Course grains ruled firm.

Selling of wheat was credited to tired longs and professionals. As on previous days principal buyers held back awaiting incentive.

Sentiment in corn was evenly divided. Commission houses absorbed local offers and the undertone held firm.

Oats followed corn. Provisions held steady without features.

VICTIM'S MOTHER IS FIRST WITNESS IN MURDER TRIAL

by Miss Oberholzer on the day of her disappearance.

Mrs. Eunice Schultz, a roomer at the Oberholzer home, identified Klensch as the man who carried the girl into the Oberholzer house after the return from Hammond.

To Use Deathbed Statement

Noblesville, Ind., Oct. 29.—(United Press)—The deathbed statement of Miss Madge Oberholzer will be the state's most important piece of evidence in its attempt to convict D. C. Stephenson, Earl Klensch and Earl Gentry of her murder.

This was revealed today in the opening statement of Charles Cox, special assistant prosecutor.

"The principal witness for the state will be Madge Oberholzer, the dead victim of the foulest murder in the history of Indiana," Cox said.

"Madge Oberholzer, standing by the very edge of her grave, will tell you as far as possible under the circumstances the story of her being drugged, kidnapped, assaulted and ravished.

"Her story will tell you how she was forced by the loss of all which women hold most dear to take the deadly poison which contributed to her untimely and cruel death."

Reviews Story of Abduction

Cox reviewed the story of Miss Oberholzer's alleged abduction as told in her deathbed statement and launched into an attack on the character of Stephenson.

"The evidence will show that Stephenson had a double personality," Cox said. "One side of him will show a magnetic, culture leader of men. The other side will show him a drunkard, and a persistent seducer and destroyer of woman's chastity."

Stephenson's palatial home in Irvington, a suburb of Indianapolis, was at times the scene of "lascivious drinking debauches," Cox said.

"To his house, upon occasion, virgin girls and good women were lured to be entrapped and debauched," Cox asserted.

At other times, Cox said, the Stephenson home was the scene of gatherings of people high in the affairs of the city and state.

Cox's scathing denunciation of the former klan leader brought a storm of protest from Ira Holmes, one of the defense attorneys.

Judge Sparks ordered that reference to Stephenson being a drunkard and seducing women be kept out of the records.

Cox read the law fixing the penalty for first degree murder and stressed the word "death" in his reading. Stephenson busied himself with some notes.

As court opened the three defendants walked to their seats with an air of indifference. Klensch was laughing.

For the first time since the trial started, Sheriff Gooding stood guard behind the chairs of the defendants. George Oberholzer and his wife, parents of the dead girl, were in the courtroom early.
