TO REOPEN SUGAR PLANT THIS WEEK

Factory to Be Opened Again After Being Closed For Lack Of Beets

The Holland-St. Louis company's sugar factory in this city will re-open Wednesday morning, at 6 o'clock, it was announced by officials of the company today. The factory has been closed since Saturday morning, due to the lack of beets on hands.

The freezing weather and snow during the most of last week, made it impossible for the farmers to lift their beets and consequently, the supply on hands at the factory before the cold weather set in, was soon exhausted. The weather has improved greatly during the last two days and the beets are arriving at the factory in large numbers again. There would probably have been enough beets on hands to reopen the factory Tuesday morning, but since the city election will be held on Tuesday, the company officials decided to wait until Wednesday to start the factory.
