Prize Winning Bull Owned By Prince Of Wales To Be Auctioned

Chicago, Dec. 2.—(United Press).—"King of the Fairies," proud bearer of the Royal colors of the prince of Wales, is soon to depart from his royalty owner. He will be auctioned off to the highest bidder tomorrow.

Mah Jong, selected late yesterday as the champion steer of the show also will be auctioned off. Mah Jong comes from Iowa State college at Ames.

Several other champions in the various classes were crowned late yesterday.

L. A. Vogler, of Hope, Ind., three times grand sweepstakes champion at the Indiana state fair, was again crowned "corn king." Victor C. Lux of Waldron, Ind., was given the title of "corn prince," when he won in the junior class.

R. V. and L. E. Peterson, both of Victor, Mont., were given the grand champion ribbons on their barley and oats leagues.

Arthur W. Jewett, Jr., of Mason, Mich., took first place with his hay display.

Frances Smith, 18, a pretty high school girl from Geary county, Oklahoma, was awarded the grand champion honors for displaying the greatest qualities of leadership in home, club and community life.

Plan Hearing On Methods Of Assessing Orchards

Indianapolis, Dec. 2.—Orchard owners from all parts of Indiana are expected to appear before the state board of tax commissioners here December 9 to participate in the hearing on the methods for assessing the orchards of the state.

Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist will attend the hearing, at the invitation of members of the tax board.

John Brown, chairman of the tax board, pointed out that under the new law the question of assessing orchards is a very difficult one.

Under the 1925 acts for reassessment of real estate—all taxable matter not actually real estate—must be assessed as personal property.

party. In the past orchards were assessed as a unit in regard to trees and real estate.

Wallace declares that the law, which was supported by the Indiana Horticulture society, works a hardship on the orchard owners of the state and will make it practically impossible for them to show a profit for their work.

He contends that unless some other method of taxing the orchardmen is found it will result in abandonment of acres of orchards throughout the state.

"Under this law a man is taxed on his ability," Wallace said. "The orchard owner is just like a business man. He must be well qualified to make a success of the work. Where one man would fail as an orchardist another would succeed."

"The trees owned by the successful man are worth more only because he makes them so. Give those same trees to a poor orchard owner and they would not be worth nearly so much."

"As far as I am concerned I can see nothing fair in this law."

During the last few weeks hundreds of orchard owners from all parts of the state have called at Wallace's office in the state house to protest against the measure.

The majority of these men, successful orchard owners, Wallace says, do not see how they can continue to operate if the present law remains in effect.

"It will mean the cutting down of hundreds of orchards over the state," Wallace said.

Don Essex, Of Monroe, Joins Undertaking Firm In Noblesville, Indiana

Don Essex, well-known young man of Monroe, has completed a six-month course in the Indianapolis school of embalming, and has successfully passed the state examination for license. Mr. Essex had the highest grade of any member of his class. He has received offers for several positions and has finally decided to become connected with an old established firm at Noblesville. He expects to move his family to Noblesville in the near future.

Mrs. Essex has resided in the Monroe neighborhood all his life. He was graduated from the Monroe high school and attended Tri-State college at Angola for one year, after which he taught in the schools of Adams county for several years.

Heche Case Postponed Until Jan. 25, Tuesday

Bluffton, Dec. 2.—Special Judge William N. Ballou, of Fort Wayne, was here Tuesday to hear the trial of Lawrence Heche, of Vera Cruz, who is charged with violation of the prohibition law. The jury was in place, but D. E. Smith, of Fort Wayne, attorney for Heche, filed a motion for a continuance of the case and presented a showing that Everett Neuenchwander, one of the main witnesses for the defense, had been injured in an accident and was unable to testify. The motion was sustained and the trial postponed until January 25. The affidavit charges Heche with selling liquor to Fred Liniger. Heche was found guilty in city court and he appealed the case to the circuit court.
