Gevena, Dec. 8—(United Press)—The world's first "aerial luncheon" has been given several thousand feet over London in a huge English passenger plane which will shortly be put in service on the London-Paris route by the Imperial Airways.

Pick-up luncheons have often been taken by air passengers before but never an elaborate meal served by two stewards, and prepared in a kitchen aboard an air liner.

Guests reported that the glasses stood as steady as Guards and that they felt much less sensation of swaying and motion than aboard a train as the two white-garbed stewards hovered up and down the alleyway between the chairs and plied the passengers with lobster salad, chickenpatties, hampies, Russian salad, charlotte russe, cocktails, liqueurs and champagne.

Below them while they ate thin lines of smoky streets, and toy houses slipped slowly behind as the guests raised their glasses in the sunshine stream.
