New State Penal Institution
Already Overcrowded;
Prison Is Overflowing

Indianapolis, Dec. 12. — (United Press)—Indiana's criminal population is increasing so rapidly that the new state reformatory at Pendleton already is too small to care for the men sentenced to serve terms there.

This statement was made by John Brown, secretary of the Indiana state board of charities.

Brown explained that when plans for the Pendleton institution were drawn that is was planned to accommodate 1,200 persons. The present population is 1,600 and it has been necessary to confine two men in one cell and erect temporary quarters to care for the overflow.

The reformatory officials have appealed to the state prison authorities asking them to help care for the overflow but that is impossible as the Michigan City institution now has 1,750 prisoners, considerably more than capacity.

Brown says that today there are more than 15,016 persons confined in the twenty state institutions.

Of this number more than one-half or 8,240 are confined in hospitals for the insane.

The state blind and deaf school has 464 inmates, the two state hospitals for the sick 424 and the homes for soldiers and their dependents 862.
